The site first selected for work during the past winter was a lofty mound outside the wall built by Nebuchadnezzar II round the Sacred Area, and when a space measuring 200 feet by 150 feet was cleared, several blocks of houses, divided by narrow streets, were found. Hitherto the Expedition had excavated only temples and fortifications which, after all, tell us little or nothing about the private daily life of Abraham's neighbours, but Mr. Woolley felt that the time had come for him to explore the ruins of the p. 282 houses of the merchants and the poorer class of inhabitants of "Ur of the Chaldees," and the results he obtained greatly exceeded his expectations. When a house fell down in Babylonia the ruins were levelled and another house was built on them, and in some mounds several layers of houses, each layer belonging to a different period, have been identified. On the site selected by Mr. Woolley the rains and winds and storms of four thousand years had removed all the more modern layers of houses, and he was able to get to work at once on a fine collection of houses which were built about 2100 B.C. The main walls being built of burnt brick, were in a good state of preservation; the interior walls were of mud brick, laid on burnt brick foundations, which rose two or three feet above the brick-paved floor. Thus the foundations formed a "damp course," and the state of the walls showed that the dwellers in the houses were not troubled by damp. The visitor, on passing through the doorway, entered a small ante-chamber, which led into the courtyard; this was partly covered in. The reception room was on one side, and the kitchen and pantry, etc., were on the other. The bedrooms of the family were on the upper floor, which were entered from a wooden gallery running round all four sides of the court yard. p. 284 Close to the front door was the stairway, the treads of which are made of solid brick. The walls of these houses are still about 20 feet in height, and the plan of them and the general arrangement of the rooms on the ground floor and upper floor are reproduced to this day in the houses of merchants and well-to-do folk at Baghdad and Hillah. There is little doubt that it was in houses of this kind that Serug, Terah, Nahor and Abraham lived. The houses and their courtyards stood side by side in rows, as at the present day; the streets then as now were narrow. An excellent representation of a street is given on Plate XII. {See page 283 for a drawing of the interior of a private house.}

When the master of the house died he was usually buried under it, together with his engraved stone cylinder-seal, pots, and inscribed clay tablets. As was to be expected, no furniture of any shape or kind was found in the houses, and even the burial places under them had been rifled. But, in spite of this, Mr. Woolley succeeded in collecting from the site a considerable number of clay tablets inscribed with tables of square and cube roots, hymns, and records of the buildings erected by various kings of Ur. Among the miscellaneous objects found may be mentioned a bottle of blue and black glass which probably came from Syria; this interesting object was probably made about 1500 B.C.p. 285

The works that were carried out after the excavation of the houses was finished threw much light upon the history of Ur in the first half of the third minennium B.C. There is now no doubt that a temple tower or Ziggurat existed at Ur as early as 2800 B.C., for portions of its walls made of plano-convex mud bricks were found buried under the Ziggurat made by Ur-Nammu 2600 B.C. Under the temple of E-nin-makh a very interesting object was discovered in the shape of the cover of an ivory toilet box bearing a Phoenician inscription (see Plate XIV, No. 1), and with it were several articles for the toilet in ivory, and a beautifully engraved comb. The remains of the royal buildings, which were erected about 2000 B.C., prove that the Sumerians, even at that early period, were able to construct halls with arches and vaulted roofs. It is clear that many of the statements which were made by architectural authorities two or three generations ago will have to be greatly modified in the light of the discoveries made at Ur. In a great commercial centre like Ur accurate weights were of prime importance, and the fine diorite duck-weight inscribed with the name of king Shulgi shows that as early as 2500 B.C. standard weights were in use in Babylonia (see Plate VII, No. 1). This standard was in use in Babylonia two thousand years later, as an inscription on a weight of Nebuchadnezzar II testifies. p. 286

The next portion of the site selected for careful excavation was the area at the south-east end, inside the wall built by Nebuchadnezzar II, where there were no buildings. A trench cut across it brought to light an early cemetery, containing graves which were made not much later than 3000 B.C. These graves yielded a large quantity of pottery; vases in diorite, hard stone, alabaster, and steatite, many of beautiful shape and design; copper bowls, vases, pots, axe-heads, adzes, spears, razors, knives and daggers; gold, silver and carnelian beads; lapis lazuli pins with heads of gold or silver; cylinder-seals beautifully engraved; rock-crystal cylinder-seals with copper caps and cores made of white or coloured paste; gold tiaras, chains, finger-rings, ear-rings, beads, amulets, etc. All these show that the crafts of the metal worker and the jeweller had reached a very high state of perfection when the first kings of the Ist dynasty of Ur began to reign in the second half of the fourth millennium B.C. When these graves were made they were only about one foot below the level of the surrounding country, but now they lie some 15 or 20 feet under the accumulated rubbish of fifty centuries. The latest graves were, according to Mr. Woolley, made about 3000 B.C., and the earliest some 500 years earlier. Among the objects found in the p. 287 lowermost layer of graves were two cylinder-seals each inscribed with the name of a king of Ur who reigned over the city several hundreds of years before its history as a great commercial centre began. In the uppermost layer the cylinder-seals are inscribed with the names of officers of the household of the daughter of Sargon of Agade, about 2600 B.C.

This princess was the High Priestess of the Moon-god of Ur.

The four principal methods of burial were as follows:--(1) The body, in its ordinary apparel, was wrapped in a mat and laid on a mat at the bottom of the grave; the vases, weapons, ornaments, etc., were placed round about it. (2) The body was placed in a wickerwork coffin, together with the small objects; the vessels in pottery, stone, etc., were grouped round it. (3) The body was laid in a wooden coffin, with the objects to be buried with it, some being enclosed in little coffers. (4) The body was laid in an oval case made of clay. In the oldest graves of all, traces of partial cremation were found. The problem of how the early Sumerians disposed of their dead has now been solved. As the Egyptians buried their dead on the west bank of the Nile, so also did the Sumerians transport the bodies of their dead across the great canal which flowed by the west wall of the city of Ur, and bury them in the western desert. p. 288

Before the close of the season cylinder-seals bearing the names of five early kings, of whom three were unknown to history, were found. From the lapis lazuli cylinder-seal of Queen Nin-Kur-Nin the name of her husband Mes-anni-padda , the founder of the Ist dynasty of Ur has been recovered. Several of the kings of this dynasty have hitherto been regarded as mythical.

Mes-anni-padda

Below the black stratum which lies under the graves of the period of 3000 B.C. the richest graves were found. Here were discovered clay tablets, inscribed with a semi-pictographic script, and seals bearing the names of kings unrecorded in history. Among the other important "finds" may be mentioned:--(1) Eight shell plaques decorated with linear patterns (see Plate XV) and animal figures; the lines are filled in with colour, red and black. (2) A royal gaming board, which consists of 20 shell plaques, decorated with linear designs and inlay of red paste and lapis lazuli, and framed with lapis lazuli, ivory and mother-of-pearl. It is the Sumerian equivalent of the so-called draught-boards which have been found in Egyptian tombs, and seems to indicate that the Sumerians, as well as the Egyptians, believed that their dead amused themselves by playing some game like that of draughts in the Other World. p. 289

But the greatest "find" of all was made just before the end of the season. About 18 feet below the level of the ground Mr. Woolley came upon a hoard of copper tools and weapons. This consisted of sets of chisels and bundles of heavy spear-heads, and side by side with these were two gold chisels and a gold spear-head. Further research brought to light more copper weapons, arrows by the quiverful, lance-points, a mace, axe-heads, and parts of bows. Round about these were pendants in carnelian, lapis lazuli and gold, the gold binding for a bow, an adze of solid gold, its wooden handle being covered with plaster painted red and bound with thin gold. Lying a little apart was a silver baldric, to which was attached a "vanity case" of gold filigree work, containing a pair of tiny tweezers, spoon and stiletto, all of gold, hung upon a silver ring. Close by was a dagger (see Plate XIV, No. 2). The hilt is formed of one piece of deep-coloured lapis lazuli studded with gold, and the blade is of burnished gold; the sheath is of solid gold. The back of the latter is plain except for two lines of simple beading, but the front is entirely covered with an intricate design in filigree work. The dagger and its sheath are marvels of design and workmanship, and as they were made at least fifty-five centuries ago, they are among the oldest and finest specimens of the craft of the goldsmith in the world. p. 290

All the more important antiquities which have fallen to the share of the Trustees of the British Museum are exhibited in the Babylonian Rooms of the Museum, and are on view all day and every day. Mr. Woolley has written and published in October each year in The Antiquaries' Journal a detailed report, with excellent plans and a large number of photographic plates, of the work done at Ur during the preceding winter, and to these the reader who requires fuller and more detailed information about the work is begged to refer. The Trustees of the British Museum have also decided to publish a full scientific Report on the work, with maps, plans, and photographs, and the first volume of it, which deals with the discovery of the temple of A-an-ni-pad-da at Tall al-`Ubed, near Ur, by Dr. H. R. Hall, and the completion of its excavation by Mr. Woolley, has already appeared. A smaller work on the temple of Tall al-`Ubed is being prepared by Dr. H. R. Hall, and Mr. C. J. Gadd, of the British Museum, is writing the history of Ur from the time of the Seven Wise Men who flourished before the Flood to the final downfall and decay of the city about 300 B.C.

One of the books of the Jerusalem library, published discreetly by Clement around AD 70, featuring a review of the events and geneaology of Genesis. Finished during Ezra's generation, the writings were probably gathered during the later years of the exile circa 550 BC. Modified slighty by the second generation of Christians, and then later again by Muslims.

The Book of Rolls is chronicle of events, therefore probably written at the same time as the two books of Chronicles. The book is a 5th book of Genesis, written in the style of the book of Asher, with geneology rolls added to it. For the purposes of presentation, the writings from the exile 500 BC were presented in a Christian setting, a common practice at the time.

An introduction typical of the Christian chuch in AD 90 is followed by a record of Genesis, and geneaologies that resemble Chronicles and Matthew. The testaments of the patriarchs of Genesis resembles a book of testaments by the patriarchs, a theme followed by the Book of the Testaments of the Patriarchs, a book that dates to the generation after the exile, yet that may have been partly written during the later exile, a time of much literary activity that was probably intended to prove to Cyrus the justification for releasing the Israelites back to their homeland.

A book attributed to and probably edited by the Syriac library at Antioch, before being publised by Clement circa AD 90. Possibly a book read by the Essenes and early Gnostics, the religious orders that appear to have lodged near the Christians at Antioch after the destruction of Jerusalem AD 68. (with the Christians having been there since the cross of their Lord, in AD 33)

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, one God, the merciful Lord.

2.

This book is one of the hidden books of Saint Clement the Apostle, disciple of Simon Cepha, which Saint Clement commanded to be kept secret from the laity.

3.
Some of them were called “The Book of the Rolls,” and there are the glorious genealogies and mysteries which our God and Saviour Jesus the Christ committed to his disciples Simon and James, and what things will happen at the end of time, and how the second coming of our Lord the Christ from heaven to the world will happen, and what will become of sinners and such like.

4.
This is the sixth of Clement’s books, treasured up in the city of Rome since the time of the Apostles.

5.
Saint Clement said,
When our God Jesus the Christ went up to heaven and the disciples were scattered in the regions of the world to evangelize, and to call mankind to the faith and to immersion by baptism, they took disciples, whom they chose and selected to be with them, and to travel about to the countries in the faith of the Christ.

Wherefore Simon Cepha took me for a disciple to himself;
I believed in him, and in Him that sent him, with a true faith;

I recognized that he was chief of the Apostles, to whom were given the keys of heaven and earth, on whom was built the Catholic Apostolic Church of God, which the gates of Hell shall not destroy, as our God Jesus the Christ said in the holy Gospel.

After a long time he took also my brothers Constans and Constantinus to be his disciples.

Twenty years after he had taken me as his disciple, he brought me together with my father and my mother, who was called Metrodora, and committed to me all the mysteries which had been given him by our Lord Jesus the Christ on the Mount of Olives.

At that time the rest of the Apostles and all the believers had a struggle with the unbelieving Jews because the Jews were killing every one of the believers whose murder was possible to them.

9.
I and my gracious Teacher Simon encompassed some of the countries, and we met with great trouble from the controversy of the Jews, and their questioning about the genealogy of the pure Mary, for their saying about her was that she was not of the children of Judah that they might invalidate by this the coming of our Lord the Christ into the world, and His Incarnation from her.

10.
They were increasing [their] bribe of money and other things to the Greeks and the Romans that they might help them in the destruction of the believers and the bringing to nought of their business, and hinder the Apostles from the reading of the Law, lest they should teach out of it about the state of mankind, and how it was in the beginning.

11.
When I saw in what misery we were with the Jews, I sought from my gracious Teacher that he would make known to me how mankind were at the beginning, and that he would make me perfect about the reasons, for he had learned everything from the Lord Jesus the Christ, and I was acquainted with the tongue of the Greeks and their books, and was learned in their mysteries, and I had deposited their secrets which had been entrusted to me, [in] my two books called the seventh and the eighth.

I informed my Teacher what I conjectured about the envy towards the Lady Mary, and my anxiety at the reproach of the Jews to me that I did not understand the Torah, and their much questioning of me about the creation of our father Adam, and what I had heard with my ears of their insult to the Lady Mary and their fiction about her without any resource being possible for me [how] I should refute them in regard to their hateful saying.

13.
The Teacher was moved by my excitement, and zeal entered him when I told him about it.

He said, “I will put it in order for thee, O my son, as thou hast asked me about it, and will initiate thee in things since the beginning of the creation, and will teach thee the genealogy of the Mother of Mercy, Mary the pure, and its authenticity, and that without doubt she is of the lineage of Judah the son of Jacob and his tribe, and I will relate to thee mysteries, and what reason there was for the fall of the Devil, the prince, from heaven.

Know, O my son, that the Lord is the beginning and before the beginning,

He who is Infinite, raised above the height, equal with the Highest, there is nothing lower about Him, nothing inward, nothing outward,

He is before the beginning, the ancient substance,

15.
He who is boundless, whom no [intelligence] [boundary] can reach, and no [discernment] [description] nor quality can [comprehend]. [truly describe].

He was above Being, and with Being, and below Being, the creative Substance, the glorious Light, which darkness reacheth not.

Light dwelling in the Light which eyes cannot reach,

before creation He was;
and He is the Former of forms, whose glory is from Himself and in Himself, and in His Essence.

[He is] the Creator of what glorifies Him, that thou mayest learn His divinity and His power,

He made the heaven and the earth,
He created before harmony the division of things.

Angels worship Him, ten homogeneous choirs, I mean by this ten ranks.

The highest rank, some of whom are nearest to the throne of the Lord God, pouring out praises in abundance, is the rank of Satanaeel, who was the prince, and praises rose up to God from all the Angels; that was the beginning in the first day which was the holy first day (Sunday), chief of days;
early in it God created the upper heaven and the worlds, and the highest rank of Angels, which is the rank of Satanaeel, and the Archangels, and powers, and chiefs, and thrones, and dignities and governors, and cherubim and seraphim, and light, and day and night, and wind and water, and air, and fire and what is like these elements.

Verily the Lord formed all this, may His names be sanctified, by the completion of His eternal Word without speech, and in the first day in which these things were created, the Holy Spirit hovered over the waters, and in its hovering over them they were blessed and sanctified, and heat was formed in them by which the watery beings are born, and with this were mixed yeasts of the creatures, such as the bird which lays the egg by its wings, and from this is formed the living bird, for by reason of the nature of the heat of flaming fire, it verily reneweth heat in the wings of the bird, and lo! with them it lays an egg in which chickens are formed.

19.
Verily the reason why the holy Paraclete hovered over the waters in the form of a bird, was that every winged fowl should be formed in this shape.

On the second day God created the lower heaven, which is called the Firmament, on which the gaze of men falls, that thou mayest know that the beings of the highest heavens which the heaven of the visible firmament covers are like the nature of the heaven of the firmament, except that the heaven which the eyes reach is separated from the highest heavens.

All the heavens are three heavens.

The visible firmament, and what is above it; it is called Dipaton and above it there is flaming fire;
and a heaven which is above the fire;
and the two heavens are filled with light and fire which created eyes cannot look at.

22.
On the second day which is the second of the days the Lord, to Whom be praise, separated between the higher water and the lower water.

Verily the rising up of the water which was formed in the height that day was like gathered clouds clinging together, and the waters remained resting in the air, none of them inclining to any one district.

On the third day God commanded the waters which were below the firmament that they should be gathered together to one place, that the dry land might be seen.

24.
When this happened, the veil was removed which was above the earth, and the earth was disclosed.

He looked upon it, and it was barren of verdure, it was dust and water mixed together.

The water was in it and below it and above it, and it was shaken to the blowing of the winds through it.

The air went up from the bosom of the earth, and rested in the bosom of its crevices and passages that in these caves might arise heat and cold for the service and consolidation of the earth, because the earth was created like a sponge standing above the water.

On this day God commanded the earth to bring forth grass and reeds and trees and seeds and roots and other things.

On the fourth day God formed the sun and the moon and the stars that the heat of the sun might be spread over the earth and it should be strengthened by its mellowness and that the moisture communicated to it by the water high above it should be dried up.

27.
On the fifth day God commanded the waters to bring forth animals of various colours and forms, some of which should fly in the bosom of the water, and others should fly above the water, and from them should spring the whales and Leviathan, and Behemoth, so terrible in their appearance, and air-fowl and water-fowl.

28.
On the sixth day God created from the earth all the beasts, and animals and insects and creeping reptiles.

This day is [Friday] [Saturday], and on it God created Adam of dust, and formed Eve from his rib.

29.
On the seventh day God had completed all creation, and He called it Sabbath.

God had created Adam in the third hour of Friday the sixth day.

30.
Iblis (Satan) had laid claim to Godhead which had entered him in the second hour of that day, and God had hurled him down from heaven to earth.

Before God the Lord created Adam, rest fell upon all the powers; and God said,
'Come, let us create a Man in our likeness and form and image.'

The Book of the Rolls

CHAPTER TWO

Divisons 31-60

BOOK OF ROLLS [3.2]

31.
When the Angels heard this saying from the Lord they became frightened and much terrified, and they said to one another, 'What is this great wonder which we hear, and how is it possible that the form of our God and Creator can appear to us?'

32.
Then all the Angels looked towards the right hand of the Lord, which was stretched out above all creation, and all of it was in His right hand.

Then they looked towards the right hand of the Lord, and it took from all the earth a little handful of dust, and from all the waters a drop of water, and from the air a soul and a spirit, and from fire the force of heat, and it became in the grasp of the Lord portions of the four elements, heat and cold, moisture and drought.

33.
Verily God, the glorious and strong, created Adam from these four weak elements, which have no power, that all creatures created from them might hear and obey him:
dust, that man might obey him;
water, that all that is born of it and in it might obey him;
air, that it might be possible for him to breathe it and to feel its breezes, and that its birds might obey him;
and fire, that the heat of forces created from it should be a powerful helper to his sense.

34.
The reason why God, may His holy names be sanctified, created Adam with His holy hand in His form and image was that he should receive wisdom and speech and animal motion, and for the knowledge concerning things.

35.
When the glorious and illustrious Angels saw one like Him in Adam, they were affrighted.

The wondrous glory upon his face terrified them, his form appeared shining with divine light greater than the light of the sun, and his body was bright and brilliant like the well-known stars in the crystal.

When the figure of Adam drew itself up, he leapt standing;
he was in the centre of the earth, he stretched out his right hand and his left hand and put his feet in order upon Golgotha, which is the place where was put the wood (cross) of our Saviour Jesus the Christ.

37.
He was dressed with a royal robe, he wore upon his head a diadem of glory and praise and honour and dignity, he was crowned with a royal crown, and there he was made king and priest and prophet.

38.
God set him upon a throne of honour, and gathered to what was there all the animals and beasts and birds and all that God had created, and made them stand before Adam.

They bent their heads and did obeisance to him, and he called each of them by its name.

He made all the creatures obey him and they responded to his command.

39.
The Angels and the Powers heard the voice of God, may He be glorified and exalted, saying to Adam,

'O Adam, I have made thee king and priest and prophet and ruler and chief and governor over all creatures that are made.

All creation shall obey thee and follow thy voice.
Under thy grasp they shall be.

To thee alone I have given this power;
I have placed thee in possession of all that I have created.'

41.
When the Angels heard this saying from the Lord they redoubled honour and respect to Adam.

42.
When the Devil saw the gift that was given to Adam from the Lord, he envied him from that day and the schismatic from God set his mind in cunning towards him to seduce him by his boldness and his curse; and when he denied the grace of the Lord towards him, he became shameless and warlike.

43.
God, may His names be sanctified, deprived the Devil of the robe of praise and dignity and called his name Devil, he is a rebel against God, and Satan, because he opposes himself to the ways of the Lord, and Iblis, because He took his dignity from him.

44.
While Adam was listening to the speech of his Lord to him, and standing upon the place of Golgotha, all the creatures being gathered together that they might hear the conversation of God with him, lo! a cloud of light carried him and went with him to Paradise and the choirs of Angels sang before him, the cherubim among them blessing and the seraphim crying 'Holy!'

until Adam came into Paradise.

45.
He entered it at the third hour on [Friday] [Saturday], and the Lord, to Him be praise, gave him the commandment, and warned him against disobedience to it.

46.
Then the Lord, to Him be praise, threw upon Adam a form of sleep, and he slept a sweet sleep in Paradise.

47.
And God took a rib from his left side, and from it He created Eve.

48.
When he awoke and saw Eve he rejoiced over her and lived with her, and she was in the pleasant garden of Paradise.

49.
God clothed them with glory and splendour.

They outvied one another in the glory with which they were clothed, and the Lord crowned them for marriage, the Angels congratulated them, and there was joy there such as never has been the like and never will be till the day in which the people at the right hand shall hear the glorious voice from the Lord.

51.
Adam and Eve remained in Paradise for three hours.

52.
The site of Paradise was high up in the air, its ground was heavenly, raised above all mountains and hills, that were thirty spans high, that is fifteen cubits, according to the cubit of the Holy Ghost.
[Lebanon, near Mt. Hermon]

53.
This Paradise stretches round from the east by a wall from the hollow to the southern place of darkness where the cursed Prince was thrown, it is the place of sorrows. [Damascus]

54.
Eden is a fountain of God lying eastwards, to a height of eight degrees of the rising of the sun, and this is the mercy of God on which the children of men put their trust, that they shall have a Saviour from thence, because God, may He be exalted and glorified, knew in His foreknowledge what the Devil would do to Adam.

55.
Adam lived in the treasury of His mercy, as David the prophet said, 'Thou hast been a fortress to us, O Lord, throughout all ages; cause us to live in Thy mercy.'

56.
The blessed David said also in his prayer about the salvation of men, 'Remember, Lord'
(the tree was the Cross which was planted in the middle of the earth),
'Thy grace which thou hast wrought from all eternity';

I mean by this the mercy which God loved to extend to all men and to our weak race.

57.
Eden is the Church of God, and the Paradise in which is the altar of rest, and the length of life which God has prepared for all the saints.

58.
Because Adam was king, priest and prophet, God caused him to enter Paradise that he might minister in Eden, the Church of God the holy Lord, as Moses the holy Prophet testifies about this, saying,

'That thou shouldest minister and declare by noble and glorious service, and keep the commandment by which Adam and Eve were brought into the Church of God.'

59.
Then God planted the tree of life in the middle of Paradise and it was the form of the cross which was stretched upon it, and it was the tree of life and salvation.

60.
Satan remained in his envy to Adam and Eve for the favour which the Lord shewed them, and he contrived to enter into the serpent, which was the most beautiful of the animals, and its nature was above the nature of the camel.

He carried it till he went with it in the air to the lower parts of Paradise.

THE BOOK OF ROLLS [4]

61.

The reason for Iblis, the cursed, hiding himself in the serpent was his ugliness, for when he was deprived of his honour he got into the acme of ugliness, till none of the creatures could have borne the sight of him uncovered, and if Eve had seen him unveiled in the serpent, when she spoke to him, she would have run away from him, and neither cunning nor deceit would have availed him with her;

but he contrived to hide himself in the serpent, the cunning creature, to teach the birds with round tongues the speech of men in Greek and such like.

He would bring a broad mirror with much light sending out rays;
he would put it between himself and a bird, and speak what he wished that the bird should know, and when the bird heard this speech, it would glance around and look in the mirror, and see the form of a bird like itself and rejoice at it, and not doubting that it was a bird of its species that was speaking to it would listen to it and attend to its language.

And it would comprehend it in a moment and talk to it.

63.

But the cursed Devil, when he entered the serpent, came towards Eve, when she was alone in Paradise away from Adam, and called her by her name.

64.

She turned to him, and looked at her likeness behind a veil, and he talked to her, and she talked to him, and he led her astray by his speech, for woman’s nature is weak, and she trusts in every word, and he lectured her about the forbidden tree in obedience to her desire, and described to her the goodness of its taste, and that when she should eat of it she should become a god;

and she longed for what the cursed one made her long for, and she would not hear from the Lord, may His names be sanctified! what He had commanded Adam about the tree.

She hastened eagerly towards it, and seized some of its fruit in her mouth.

Then she called Adam, and he hastened to her, and she gave him of the fruit, telling him that if he ate of it he would become a god.

He listened to her advice because he should become a god as she said.

When he and she ate the deadly fruit they were bereft of their glory, and their splendour was taken from them, and they were stripped of the light with which they had been clothed.

When they looked at themselves, they were naked of the grace which they had worn, and their shame was manifest to them; they made to themselves aprons of fig-leaves, and covered themselves therewith, and they were in great sadness for three hours.

68.

They did not manage to continue in the grace and the power with which the Lord had endued them before their rebellion for three hours, till it was taken from them and they were made to slip and fall down at the time of sunset on that day, and they received the sentence of God in punishment.

69.

After the clothing of fig-leaves they put on clothing of skins, and that is the skin of which our bodies are made, being of the family of man, and it is a clothing of pain.

70.

The entrance of Adam into Paradise was at the third hour.

He and Eve passed through great power in three hours, they were naked for three hours, and in the ninth hour they went out from Paradise, unwillingly, with much grief, great weeping, mourning and sighing.

71.

They slept towards the East of it near the altar.

When they awoke from their sleep, God spoke to Adam and comforted him, saying to him, blessed be His names, ‘O Adam! do not grieve, for I will restore thee to thine inheritance, out of which thy rebellion has brought thee.

72.

Know that because of my love to thee I have cursed the earth, and I will not have pity upon it, on account of thy sin.

73.

I have cursed also the serpent by whom thou hast been led astray, and I have made its feet go within its belly.

I have made dust its food.

I have not cursed thee.

I have decreed against Eve that she shall be at thy service.

75.

Know certainly that when thou hast accomplished the time that I have decreed for thee to dwell outside, in the accursed land, for thy transgression of my commandment, I will send my dear Son;

He will come down to the earth,
He will be clothed with a body from a Virgin of thy race, named Mary.

76.

I will purify her and choose her, and bring her into power generation after generation until the time that the Son comes down from Heaven.

In that time shall be the beginning of thy salvation and restoration to thine inheritance.

Command thy sons when thy death approaches which I have decreed for thee that when thou diest they keep thy body in myrrh and cassia, and put it in the cave where thou art dwelling to-day till the time of the exit of thy children from the bosom of paradise and their passage to the dusty land.

78.

When that time comes, instruct the one of thy children who lives until then to carry thy body with him and put it in the place where I shall make him halt.

This place where he shall put thy body is the centre of the earth; from it and in it salvation shall come to thee and to all thy children.’

79.

God disclosed to him all the griefs and pains that should happen to him, and commanded him to have patience about this.

80.

When He put Adam and Eve out of Paradise, He shut its gate, and put in charge a fiery Angel.

81.

He caused Adam and Eve to dwell in the holy mountain on which is the foundation of Paradise, in the place known as Matarimn.

They lived there in a cave at the top of the hill, hidden in it, and despairing of mercy, and they were then pure virgins.

Then Adam thought of the wedding of Eve, and he found in the foundation of Paradise gold and myrrh and incense.

He left this together, and consecrated it in the interior of the cave, which he had already made his house of prayer.

The gold which he got from the foundation of Paradise was like in quantity to 72 images.

He paid this with the myrrh and the incense to Eve, saying,
‘This is thy dowry, keep it.
This must be all offered together to the Son of God at the time of His coming into the world.

The gold is the symbol of His royalty;
the incense is to burn before Him;
and the myrrh is to anoint His body which He will take from us.

This shall be a witness between me and thee with our Saviour that He shall come to the world.’

Adam called this cave the Cave of Treasures.

86.
When a hundred years had passed over him after his exit from Paradise, and he and Eve were grieved and weeping, they went down from the holy hill to its foot, and there Adam knew Eve, and she conceived, and her time was fulfilled, and she bare Cain, and Lusia his twin-sister.

87.
He knew her again, and she conceived, and her time was fulfilled, and she bare Abel and also his twin-sister Aclima.

88.
The boys and the girls grew, and attained to discretion. Adam said to Eve, ‘If God lets these lads and lasses grow up, let Cain marry Aclima the sister of Abel, and let Abel marry Lusia the sister of Cain.’

And they did thus.

89.
But Cain said to Eve, ‘O Mother, I have a greater right to my sister who was born with me.

Let her be given to me as a wife, and let Abel’s sister who was born with him be given to him as a wife.’

For Lusia was more beautiful than Aclima, being like her mother Eve.

Adam heard of his speech, and it made him angry and annoyed him.

He said to Cain his son, ‘Thy request, O my son, is unlawful, for it is not allowed to thee to marry thy sister who was born with thee.’

From that time Cain envied his brother Abel and thought of killing him.

91.
Then Adam said to him and to Abel, ‘Choose some of the fruits of the earth and of the young of the flock and go up this holy hill, and go into the Cave of Treasures, and pray there before the Lord.

Offer to Him what you have brought, fruit, and any young animals as an offering.
When you have done this, let each of you take his wife.’

And they did so.

While they were going up the hill, behold, the Devil entered into Cain, and incited him to the murder of Abel.

Then they brought their offerings before the Lord;

the Lord accepted the offering of Abel and rejected the offering of Cain, because God, may He be praised and exalted, knew the purpose of Cain, and how he was preparing the murder of his brother.

When Cain saw that the Lord, may His name be praised, had accepted the offering of Abel instead of his offering, his envy of Abel increased and his wrath against him.

When they came down from the hill, Cain attacked Abel and slew him with a sharp stone.

97.
God cursed Cain, and his decree came down against him.

He did not cease to be in fear and terror all the days of his life.

God led him with his wife from the holy hill, [Mt. Hermon] outside to the cursed land, and they lived there. [Damsacus]

99.
Adam and Eve grieved much about Abel for a hundred years.

Then Adam came near to Eve, and she conceived, and her time was fulfilled, and she bare Seth, the handsome man, the complete and perfect giant.

100.
In his perfection he was like his father Adam, and God protected him when he grew up, making him the father of the other giants of the earth.

The first who was born to Seth was Enos.

And Enos begat Cainan, and Cainan begat Mahlaleel; these were born during the life of Adam.

Adam lived 930 years, to the time that Mahlaleel was a 135 years old.

When the time of his death came, he summoned Seth, and Enos, and Cainan and Mahlaleel;
he prayed over them and blessed them, and commanded to his son Seth this testament:

[A testament of Adam]

104.

Hear, O my son Seth! what I command thee.
Keep it, and thou shalt understand it.

105.

Command it at thy death to thy son Enos, that Enos may command this to Cainan, and Cainan may command it to Mahlaleel, that he may act according to this testament, and that the rest of your generations may learn, generation after generation, and tribe after tribe.

This is the first thing that I command thee.

When I die, embalm my body with myrrh and cassia, and put it in the Cave of Treasures of the holy hill, that thou mayest tell whosoever of thy posterity is alive at the time when your exit shall take place from this holy Paradise-encircled hill, to carry my body with him, and go with it to the centre of the earth, and put it there, and in that place salvation shall come to me and to all my children.

Thou, O my son Seth, shalt after my death be governor of thy people in the fear of God.

Remove thyself and all thy children, and keep them apart from the children of the murderer Cain.

Understand, O my son, the state of the hours of the night and of the day, and their names, and what praises God in them, wherewith you must call on God at their approach, and at what hour prayer and supplication is due.

109.

My Creator has taught me this, and made me understand the names of all the beasts of the earth, and birds of the air; and the Lord has initiated me into the number of the hours of the night and of the day, and the affairs of the Angels and their powers and how they are.

110.

111.

Know that in the first hour of the day is the raising of the praise of my children to God.

112.

In the second hour there are the prayers of the Angels and their cry.

113.

In the third hour the birds give praise.

114.

In the fourth hour is the worship of spiritual beings.

115.

In the fifth hour is the worship of the other living creatures.

116.

In the sixth hour is the entreaty of the cherubim and their supplication.

117.

In the seventh hour is the entrance to God and the exit from His presence, for in it the prayers of every living thing rise to the Lord.

In the eighth hour is the worship of all heavenly beings and fiery creatures.

119.

In the ninth hour is the service of the Angels of God who stand before Him, and the throne of His majesty.

The tenth hour is for the water, and in it the Holy Ghost hovers and goes up over the other waters and chases the devils from them.

THE BOOK OF ROLLS [6.2 - 7.1]

121.
Were it not for the Holy Spirit hovering every day over the waters and descending in that hour, when any one drank water, would there not be destruction to him from the corrupting devils in it?

122.
If any one took the water in that hour, and one of the priests of God mixed it with holy oil and anointed with it the sick and those in whom were unclean spirits, they were cured of their diseases.

123.
In the eleventh hour there is joy and rejoicing to the righteous.

124.
In the twelfth hour the supplication and cry of men is accepted before God.

125.
The hours of the night.

126.
In the first hour there is the worship of the devils.

127.
In this hour, the hour of their worship, they do not hurt any one, and no one fears them until the time of their return from their worship.

128.
In the second hour there is the worship of the great fishes and all that is upon the water, and the creeping things that are therein.

129.
In the third hour is the worship of the fire which is below the abyss, about this hour it is not possible for any one to speak.

130.
In the fourth hour is the consecration of the seraphim.

I heard that [consecration] in this hour during the time of my stay in Paradise, before my rebellion against the commandment.

When I transgressed the command, I could no longer hear the voices nor their movement and agitation as I used to hear them, and I could not see anything holy as I used to see it before my sin.

132.
In the fifth hour there is the worship of the water which is above the heaven.

133.
Verily I and the Angels used in that hour to hear voices from the water which is in the height, and a tumult as if of chariots and great wheels and the sounding amongst the waves, and commotion among the echoes in praise to the Lord.

134.
In the sixth hour is the supplication of the clouds to God when they are fearful and trembling.

135.
In the seventh hour the powers of the earth are led forth, and they sing praise, whilst the waters sleep and are stilled.

If a man takes anything from the water in that hour and the priest mixes holy oil with it and anoints with it the sick and those who cannot sleep at night, verily the sick are cured and the wakeful sleep.

In the eighth hour the grass comes forth from the earth.

137.
In the ninth hour is the service of the Angels and the entrance of prayers before God.

138.
In the tenth hour the gates of heaven are opened, and the cry of my believing children is heard, and they receive what they have asked from God, may He be exalted and praised, and the seraphim rub their wings, and by the force of their rubbing the cock crows in praise to the Lord.

In the eleventh hour there is joy and delight over all the earth, for the Sun enters the Paradise of God, and its light arises in the regions of the earth.

All creatures are illumined by the falling of the sun's rays upon them.

In the twelfth hour my children must burn jasmine before the Lord, for by it there is much repose in heaven for all its inhabitants.

THE BOOK OF ROLLS [7]

141.
Know, O my son Seth, and attend to my saying.

142.
Be sure that God will come down to the earth as He said to me, and made me understand and know when He comforted me at my exit from Paradise.

Praise to His names!

He spoke to me, saying that at the end of time He will be incarnate of a Virgin girl named Mary and will be veiled in me.

He will put on my skin, and will be born like the birth of man by a force and direction that none can understand but Himself and those to whom He reveals it;

145.
He will run with the children, boys and girls of that period;

146.
He will do wonders and signs openly;
He will walk on the waves of the sea as if walking on the dry land;

147.
He will rebuke the winds in a manifest way, and they will be led by His command.
He will call to the waves of the sea, and they will answer Him obediently.

At His command the blind shall see, the lepers shall be cleansed, the deaf shall hear, the dumb shall speak, the deformed shall be straightened, the lame shall spring up, the palsied shall rise and walk.

Many rebels shall be led to God, those who have wandered shall be led aright, and devils shall be driven away.

150.
When the Lord comforted me with this, He said to me,
'O Adam, grieve not, for thou art a god, as thou thoughtest to become by thy transgression of my commandment, and I will make thee a god, not at this time, but after the lapse of years.'

THE BOOK OF ROLLS [7.2 - 8]

151.

The Lord said to me also,
‘I have verily brought thee out of the land of Paradise, to the land which brings forth thorns and briers, that thou mayest inhabit it;
I will bend thy loins, and make thy knees tremble from age and senility.

152.

O thou dust! to death I will deliver thee, and thy body I will make to be food for maggots, and the fodder of the worm.

153.

After five days and a half (of my days) I will have pity on thee in my mercy.

I will come down to thee, and in thy house will I dwell and with thy body will I be clothed.

For thy sake, O Adam, I will become a child;
for thy sake, O Adam, I will appear in the market-places; for thy sake, O Adam, I will fast for forty days;

for thy sake, O Adam, I will receive baptism;

for thy sake, O Adam, I will be lifted up on the cross;
for thy sake, O Adam, I will endure lies;

for thy sake, O Adam, I will be beaten with the whip;
for thy sake, O Adam, I will taste vinegar;

for thy sake, O Adam, my hands will be nailed;
for thy sake, O Adam, I will be pierced with a spear;

for thy sake, O Adam, I will thunder in the height;
for thy sake, O Adam, I will darken the sun;

for thy sake, O Adam, I will cleave the rocks;
for thy sake, O Adam, I will frighten the powers of heaven;

161.

for thy sake, O Adam, I will cause heaven to rain on the desert;
for thy sake, O Adam, I will open the graves;

for thy sake, O Adam, I will cause all creation to tremble; for thy sake, O Adam, I will make a new earth, and after three days, which I have spent in the grave, 163.

I will raise up the body which I took from thee, and will make it go up with me without any separation from me, and cause it to sit at the right hand of my Godhead.

I will make thee a god as thou hast desired.’

Keep, O my son Seth, the commandments of God, and do not despise my word to thyself, and learn that the Lord must come down to earth, and godless people will take Him, and stretch Him on the wood of the cross, and strip Him of His raiment, and raise Him between wicked thieves.

He will go up upon the cross in the substance of His humanity,
He will be killed, and the body which He took from us will be buried.

166.
Then after three days He will raise it and take it up with Him to heaven, and will set it with Him at the right hand of His divinity.

167.
To Him be the glory and the dignity and the praise and the greatness and the worship and the reverence and the hallelujah and the song, and to His Son, and to the Holy Ghost from now and always, and throughout all ages and times, Amen.

168.
Know, O my son, that there must come a Flood to wash all the earth on account of the children of Cain, the wicked man who slew thy brother for his envy about his sister Lusia.

169.
After the Flood through the wickedness of many congregations there shall be the end of the world, the conditions will be fulfilled, things will be perfected, the time will be cut short which I have fixed for the creatures, fire will consume whatever it reaches before the Lord, and the earth shall be consecrated.

THE BOOK OF ROLLS [8]

170.
Seth wrote this testament, and sealed it with the seal of his father Adam, which he had from Paradise, and the seal of Eve, and his own seal.

And Adam died, and the hosts of the Angels assembled to put him on his bier, for his honour with God, and Seth embalmed him, and swathed him, and he and his sons bare rule.

And he put him eastwards of Paradise where he slept at his exit from it, near the town that was built before all building, called Enoch in the inhabited world.

When Adam died, the sun was darkened, and the moon for seven days and seven nights, with a gross darkness.

Seth took the scroll in which he wrote the testament of his father Adam into the Cave of Treasures along with the offerings which Adam had carried with him from the land of Paradise, that is to say, gold, myrrh, and incense, about which Adam taught Seth and his children that they should belong to three Magian kings, and that they should travel with these things to the Saviour of the world, to be born in a city called Bethlehem, a territory of Judah.

There was not one of the children born to Adam before his death who did not gather to him;
they bade him adieu, he prayed over them and wished them health.

Then he died, in the 930th year by the reckoning of Abu-Seth.

That is the beginning. [of the story] [of the genesis of the generations]

177.
The exit of our father Adam from this world was at three o’clock in the day, on Friday the sixth of Nisan, fourteen nights after the new moon.

On a similar day our Lord the Christ gave up His spirit to His Father’s hand.

Adam’s children and children’s children grieved for him a hundred and forty days, for he was the first mortal who died on the earth, and the tribes were divided among the people of Cain the murderer after the death of Adam.

179.
Seth took his children and his children’s children and their wives, and made them go up to the glorious and holy hill, the place in which Adam was buried.

Cain and his people and his children stayed below the hill, in the place where he killed Abel.

Seth became governor of the people of his time in godliness and purity and holiness.

The Book of the Rolls

CHAPTER SEVEN

Divisons 181-210

BOOK OF ROLLS [9 - 10]

181.
My initiation, O my son Clement, into the story of Adam and this his testament was from the Magi who travelled to the Lady Saint Mary with offerings at the time of the birth of Jesus Christ our God the Saviour.

182.
Verily we found that they had a scroll with all this in it, and it was put by for safe keeping.

183.
I and the other Jews believed in this, and there were many things in it besides what I have shewn to thee, which it is not proper to make known at this time, and I must tell thee about them afterwards.

I will disclose to thee all the secrets with which I have been entrusted.

The reason of God’s calling the children of Seth Ben-Adam, “the sons of God,” was as the book says what He had revealed to Seth about godliness and purity.

The Lord appropriated them to Himself by this name;
it is the most famous of names on account of their favour with Him.

186.
He appointed them to replace the choir of Angels which had rebelled and fallen from Heaven.

187.
He put Seth and his race in the lower parts of Paradise, and around it on the holy hill, [Lebanon] they praising the Lord and sanctifying His name in all peace, no thought intruding on them about the affairs of the world, their greatest work being praise and hallelujah with the Angels, for they heard their voices in praise and hallelujah in Paradise, for it was raised thirteen spans above them, by the span of the Holy Ghost.

They did not undergo the least labour.

The food with which they sustained their bodies was the fruit of trees growing at the summits of the Mount of Paradise.

The zephyr of Paradise, which reached these trees, ripened their fruits.

This tribe was godly and holy;
there was no anger in any one of them nor envy nor quarrelling nor pride nor hatred, and they held no shameless conversations nor falsehood nor slander nor calumny, and they do not swear untruthfully nor in vain.

Their oaths were among themselves by the purity of the blood of pure Abel.

190.
Their custom was to rise early, all of them, the old and the young, the male and the female; to go up to the top of the hill and to worship there before God and be blessed by the body of their father Adam.

Then they would lift up their eyes to Paradise and praising and sanctifying God they would return to their place.

Seth ben-Adam the godly lived 912 years.

Then he fell sick of his disease of which he died.

191.
There gathered to him Enos and Cainan and Mahlaleel and Jared and Enoch their wives, their sons and their daughters.

He prayed over them, and made vows for them, and blessed them, and said to them,

“By the truth of the blood of pure Abel, let not one of you descend from this holy hill!

Do not mix with the children of Cain the murderer.

You know the enmity between us since the murder of Abel the pure.”

193.
Then his son Enos came near him, and he said to him, “Thou art lord of thy people.

Behold, I die.

Devote thyself to service before the Lord and before the consecrated body of our father Adam.”

194.
He made him swear by the blood of Abel the pure that he would govern his people well, and rule them in godliness and purity, and never cease the service before the body of Adam.

195.
Seth died lat the age of nine hundred and twelve years, on Tuesday the twenty-fourth night of Ab, the twentieth year of the life of Enoch the righteous.

He was embalmed with myrrh and frankincense and cassia, and put in the Cave of Treasures with the body of his father Adam.

His people mourned for him forty days.

THE BOOK OF ROLLS [10]

197.
Enos governed his tribe after the death of his father in purity and godliness;
he did to them what his father commanded.

When Enos had lived eight hundred and twenty years,
Lamech the Blind, of the tribe of Cain the murderer, killed someone in the thicket known as Nod.

This was the cause of it.

Lamech was passing the thicket, leaning upon one of his youthful sons.

He heard a movement in the thicket, it was the movement of Cain, for it was not possible for him to stay in one place since he had killed his brother.

Lamech thought that this movement was that of some wild beasts.

He took up a stone from the ground and threw it towards the moving thing.

The stone hit Cain between the eyes and killed him.

His son said, “By God, thou hast killed our father Cain with thy shot.”

202.
Then Lamech the Blind lifted up his hands to give him a blow on the ear out of grief for the death of Cain.

He hit the head of his son and killed him.

When Enos had reached 905 years he fell sick of his disease of which he died, and there gathered to him the rest of the fathers; amongst them were Jared, and Enoch, and Methuselah, and Cainan the son of Methuselah, and Mahlaleel, and their wives and their sons and their daughters.

He blessed them and made vows for them and prayed over them and confirmed them in the oaths by the blood of Abel—
“oh, do not mix yourselves with the children of Cain, and oh do not go down from the holy mountain.”

205.
He reminded them of the enmity betwixt them on account of the murder of Abel.

206.
Then Cainan his son came near him.

He said to him,
“O my son, be to thy people and family as I have been to them, and govern them after my death.”

207.
He commanded his son Mahlaleel about the care of his tribe in godliness and purity, and that he should not cease from the service before the body of our father Adam during his life.

And Enos died when he had reached 905 years, on the sabbath day, when the third night of October had passed, in the fifty-third year of the life of Methuselah.

His eldest son Cainan embalmed him, and swathed him, and put him in the Cave of Treasures.

210.
Cainan governed his people in godliness and holiness, and kept the commandments of his father.

He lived for 920 years and died on Wednesday, the thirteenth night of June.

The Book of the Rolls

CHAPTER EIGHT

Divisons 211-240

BOOK OF ROLLS [11]

211.
Mahlaleel looked after his burial, and put him in the Cave of Treasures with his fathers.

Mahalaleel lived for 895 years.

212.
When death came near to him, he commanded his people like the commands of his fathers who had preceded him.

He appointed Jared his son over the tribe.

His death was on Sunday after two nights of Nisan had passed.

Jared looked after him, and put him in the cave with his fathers.

When Jared was of the age of 500 years, some of the sons of Seth disobeyed the commands of their fathers, and threw away their faith behind their backs.

One by one they began to go down from the holy hill to the tribes of the children of Cain.

This was the reason that Lamech the Blind was followed by two sons, one being called Tufeel (Jubal) and the other Tubalcain.

They made lyres, that is, harps, flutes, drums, and other musical instruments.

The Devils awoke harmonious tones in them, and there was not one among the sons of Cain to command good behaviour or to restrain from what was forbidden.

Every one of them did according to his lust.

They busied themselves with musical instruments, and with eating and drinking, and immorality.

The Devil hunted the sons of Seth that he might mingle them with the children of Cain, by means of these musical instruments, for they heard the tones of them;

he brought them down from the holy hill to the cursed land, and he removed them from the protection of God and His angels to the protection of the Devils;

219.
they chose death rather than life, and renounced the name which God had bestowed on them, because, may His name be sanctified, He called them the sons of the Lord, according to His gracious saying in the prophecy of David, where he says, 220.

“Verily, ye are all gods, and ye shall be called the sons of the Most High.

When ye do evil and defile your bodies with the idolatrous daughters of Cain, like them ye shall die in sin.”

They longed for unclean amusements.

They had no shame about this and thought no harm of it.

222.
The earth was contaminated; children were confused;
no one knew his child from the child of another.

The Devil incited them and he goaded them on and appropriated them to every misery.

223.
They rejoiced in their works.

You could hear from them hateful laughter like the neighing of steeds.

224.
Their noise was heard in the holy mountain, and there assembled of the children of Seth a hundred powerful strong giants, for the descent.

This came to [the knowledge of] Jared, and he was much troubled.

He called them to his presence, and adjured them by the blood of Abel the Pure not to go down;
he reminded them of the oaths which their fathers who had gone before had received for them.

226.
Enoch the Righteous was there and said to them, “Know, O sons of Seth, that whosoever rejects the commandment of the Father and opposes the oaths by which he has been adjured and puts them behind his back, and goes down from this holy mount, that he shall never come back to it.”

227.
But they did not turn at the warning of Jared and at the prohibitions of Enoch, and they went down.

228.
When they saw the daughters of Cain and their beauty, and that they uncovered their bodies without shame, they committed fornication with them, and destroyed their souls. [spirits]

When they had done this, they aimed at a return to the hill, but its stones became burning fire, and they could not do it.

Another tribe wished for an alliance with them, not knowing about the affair of the stones.

They went down to them, and defiled themselves with their defilement.

When Jared reached the age of 972 years, Death came near to him.

There gathered to him Enoch and Methuselah, and Lamech, and Noah.

He prayed over them and made vows for them and said,

“But as for you, go not down from this holy mountain;
yet your sons and your posterity shall be removed from it, because God will not allow them upon it on account of their transgression of the commandments of the fathers.”

233.
Then he said to the rest of their children,
“You shall journey to the dusty land which brings forth thorns and briers.

Whosoever of you goes out from this holy land, let him take with him the body of our father Adam, and if he can take all the bodies of the fathers, let him do it, and take with him the books of the testaments, and the gifts of gold and myrrh and frankincense, and put this with the body of our father Adam where God shall command him.”

234.
Then said he to Enoch,
“But thou, O my son, do not separate thyself from the service and praise before the body of our father Adam and serve before God in godliness and holiness all the days of thy life.”

235.
He died in the third hour of Friday when the twelfth night of May had passed, in the 360th year of the life of Methuselah.

His son embalmed him and swathed him, and put him in the Cave of Treasures.

236.
God rejected the other children of Seth on account of their love of sin.

70 assembled, and were inclined to descend.

237.
When Enoch and Methuselah and Lamech and Noah saw this, they were much grieved.

238.
When Enoch had finished his service before the Lord for fifty years, this being the 365th year of his life, he presided over his house with his God.

He called for Methuselah and Lamech and Noah, and said, 239.

“I know that the Lord will be angry with this people, and will surely judge them without mercy.

But you, the rest of the fathers and of the holy races, do not leave off the service before the Lord, and be pure and godly.

240.
Know that there shall not be born in this holy mountain after you any man who shall be father and chief to his people.”

BOOK OF ROLLS [12 - 13]

241.
When Enoch had finished this testament, God took him up to the land of life, and made him dwell round about Paradise in the country where there is no death.

Then the children of Seth removed from the holy mountain to the quarters of Cain and his children.

None of them remained on the mountain save the three fathers, Methuselah, Lamech and Noah.

Noah the just kept his virgin soul for 500 years.

After that, the merciful God revealed to him about the people who were subject to him, and commanded him to marry a woman named Haikal the daughter of Namousa, the son of Enoch, the brother of Methuselah.

God disclosed to him about the Deluge which He was about to send upon the earth, and taught him that this would be after a hundred years, and commanded him to prepare the ark, that is, the ship for his salvation and that of his children, and that he should cut the wood from the holy mountain and make it in the quarters of the sons of Cain 245.

He commanded him to make its length 300 cubits, according to [the length of] his arm; its breadth 50 cubits, and its height 30 cubits, by the length of his arm; and the breadth of its top above should be one cubit, and that he should make three stories to it.

246.
The lowest should be for the tame and the wild animals and the cattle, the middle one for the birds and their like,
and the highest one for him and his children and his wife and his sons' wives.

247.
And that he should make in it storehouses for water and for food and for fodder.

Also that He should prepare a gong of the cedar tree, its length to be three cubits, and its breadth one cubit, and that its hammer should be made of the same.

248.
"When thou beginnest to make the ship, thou shalt beat three strokes on it every day, one in the morning, the second in the middle of the day, that they may bring the workmen food; and the third at sunset for their departure.

249.
If they ask thee about thy work, tell them that God is sending a flood of water to cleanse the earth and that thou art making the ship to save thyself and thy children."

Noah received the commandment of the Lord, and married her.

In the course of the hundred years she bare him three male children, Shem, Ham and Japhet.

They also married some of the daughters of Methuselah.

When Noah had finished the building of the ship, and entered it with those whom God commanded should enter it with him, the second thousand of the years of the time of Adam was finished, as the 70 interpreters expound.

They said, From Adam till the Deluge was 2,000 years. [the ancients counted 2 years for each year]

252.
When Lamech had lived 777 years, Methuselah his father died;
this was four years before the Flood.

253.
Then Lameth died after him, and his death was on the twenty-first day of September, in the 68th year of the life of Shem, the first-born of Noah.

His son Noah swathed him, and enbalmed him, and put him in the Cave of Treasures.

He mourned for him 40 days and remained with all the holy fathers, Noah and his children.

The daughters of Cain conceived by the sons of Seth, and brought forth giant-sons.

It was certainly supposed by some that the Book [the Bible] relates and says that the Angels came down to earth and mingled with the children of men, that those who came down and mingled with the children of men were really angels.

256.
This was only said on account of the sons of Seth and their union with the daughters of Cain, for God, may His name be glorified, had already out of His love to them, called them, as we said before, Sons of God and Angels of God.

257.
So he errs who thinks this;
for union, that is, marriage, was not in the substance of spiritual beings, and not in their nature, and if it had been in them as it is in men, the Devils would not have left any one in the world alone without corrupting them, till not a virgin would have been left on the earth, for the foul Devils love corruption and fornication.

258.
As they cannot do this, they change their nature on account of it;
they recommend it to men and make them love it.

Methuselah lived for 969 years. When Death came to him, there gathered to him Lamech, and Noah, and Shem, and Ham, and Japhet and their wives, for none but they were left on the holy hill.

Methuselah blessed them, and called to them; he was weeping and sorrowful.

He said to them,
“There remaineth none but you on this mountain out of all the tribes who once were on it.

261.
The Lord God of our fathers who formed our father Adam and our mother Eve and blessed them till the earth was filled with their progeny, may He bless you and multiply you and cause your fruit to grow.

May He be to you a keeper and a shepherd.

I ask of Him to fill the earth with your progeny, and to help you and strengthen you and save you from the fearful punishment that is coming upon this hill, and that He may give you a share of the gift which He gave to our father Adam, that He may bring blessings into your dwellings, and bestow upon you prophecy, power, and priesthood.”

263.

Then he said to Noah,
“O thou blessed of the Lord, hear my speech and do my commandment.

Know that I go out of this world as the saintly fathers went out of it.

Verily the Lord shall send a Deluge to drown the earth for the many sins of men, but thou and thy children shall be saved.

When I am dead,
embalm my body like as were embalmed the bodies of the fathers who have gone before.

Bury me in the Cave of Treasures.

266.
Take thy wife, and thy sons, and thy sons' wives;
go down from this mountain, and bear with thee the body of our father Adam, and the offerings which thou didst bring out with him from Paradise, namely, gold and myrrh and frankincense.

267.
Put the body of our father Adam within the Ark which God commanded me to prepare;
and the other bodies separately from it, so that the body of Adam may be like a dyke ever in the midst.

Put the offerings on his breast.

Dwell thou and thy sons in the east of the ark, thy wife and thy sons' wives in the west, so that the body of our father Adam may be a barrier to hinder the men from sinning with regard to the women, and to hinder them from sinning with regard to the men;

let them not gather together for food or drink till ye come out of the Ark.

When the water of the Deluge departs from the earth, and ye come out of the Ark, and dwell upon the earth, then gather ye together for food and drink, and cease not the service before the body of our father Adam nor the ministration before God in godliness and holiness within the Ark.

270.
When your exit from it takes place, then put the offerings which thou didst bring out from Paradise in the east of the land in which thou dwellest.

271.
When Death comes to thee, make thy testament to thy son Shem.

Command him to carry the body of our father Adam, and to bury it in the middle of the earth.

272.
Verily it is the place in which there shall be salvation to him and to his children.

Where he burieth the body, let him appoint a man from among his children to serve before the body and to minister.

273.
Let him be pure all the days of his life, and let him command him that he dwell not in any house, that he shed no blood, that he shave not his hair, nor pare his nails, nor bring there any offering of beasts, but let his offering before the Lord be of fine bread, pure and white, and the best drink, pressed from the fruit of the vine, until the time that God shall certainly command him.

274.
Verily the Angel of the Lord shall go before the man chosen to officiate as a priest before the body of Adam till he shall put it in the middle of the earth, and where the body ought to be buried.

275.
Let this chosen one be commanded that his raiment be of the skins of beasts, and that he be unique as it is unique.

Verily he is the priest of the glorious God."

276.
When Methuselah had finished this testament, and tears were coming down from his eyes, on account of the grief that was in his heart, he died.

Then 696 years were completed, it was in Adar (March) on a Sunday.

277.
Noah and Shem and Japhet and their wives laid him out with weeping and groaning.

They held a mourning for him for 40 days;
he was swathed and embalmed and laid with the fathers in the Cave of Treasures.

278.
They were blessed by the other bodies that were there.

Then Noah bore the body of Adam and the bodies of the fathers from the Cave, and put them into holy coffins.

Of the offerings Shem carried the gold, Ham carried the myrrh, and Japhet carried the frankincense.

They left the Cave of Treasures with weeping and groaning.

A noise was raised by them which was heard from Paradise, sorrow and mourning on account of their departure from the mountain, when they knew that they were leaving it for good.

They lifted up their heads towards Paradise, they sobbed, and wept, and said:

281.
"Peace be to thee, O holy Paradise! dwelling-place of our father Adam;
we are deprived of thy shelter, which is denied to us then, on our return to the cursed land in which we suffer pains and endure labours.

Peace be to thee, O Cave of Treasures! from us and from all the bodies of the fathers.

Peace be to thee, O glorious dwelling-place and inheritance of the saintly fathers for ever.

Peace be to you, O ye Fathers, beloved friends of God.

Pray for us and bless us, and entreat for our salvation, O holy ones of God, who are well-pleasing unto Him.

Peace be to Seth, chief of the fathers.

Peace be to Enos, governor of his people, and righteous judge amongst them.

Peace be to Cainan and Mahlaleel, those who govern their people in purity.

Peace be to Methuselah and Jared and Lamech and Enoch, servants of God.

286.
We entreat you all to mediate for our salvation lest we be prevented looking for our inheritance from this time forth for evermore."

287.
Then they came down from the mountain, kissing its stones and embracing its trees with weeping and great grief, and they travelled towards the land.

288.
When Noah had finished building the ship, he entered it, and brought in the body of Adam and put it in the middle of it, with the offerings upon its breast.

289.
This was on a Friday, on the 17th day of March, it is also said, of May.

Early the next day he brought in the beasts and the cattle, and made them dwell in the lowest deck.

290.
In the middle of the day he brought in the birds and all the sentient beings, and made them dwell in the middle deck.

At sunset Noah and his sons and his sons' wives entered, and dwelt in the topmost deck.

THE BOOK OF ROLLS [15]

291.
The Ark was built in the form of a Church, in which the men are prevented from mingling with the women;
as there is peace and love betwixt man and woman, and between the elders amongst them and the youths, thus there was love betwixt the rest of the beasts and the birds and the sentient beings in the ship;
and as wise men are at peace with their inferiors, thus were the lions and the ewes at peace in the Ark.

292.
All that were in it were seven pairs of all the clean beasts, and two pairs of the unclean ones.

293.
When Noah and his people had arrived, the Lord shut the Ark.

Then the doors of heaven were opened, and the doors of the abyss, and the waters came down in torrents, and the imprisoned sea appeared, which is called Oceanus, which encircles the whole earth.

294.
Raging winds were sent out from all directions.

When the sons of Seth saw this, they came near to the place of the Ark, and entreated Noah to carry them; but he gave them no answer about it, because the Ark was bolted and sealed by command of the Lord, and the Angel of the Lord was standing directing it.

Repentance encompassed them, sorrow came upon them, and they had no refuge from destruction, as they were also hindered from going up to the holy mountain.

They were all destroyed by drowning and suffocation, in the thick waters and the raging winds, as David the Prophet sang about their state where he said, 296.

"I said, All ye are gods, and children of the Most High ye shall be called;
by this great sign ye are marked;

297.
but sin hath overthrown you, and ye have rebelled against the commandment;
ye have defiled jour bodies with the idolatrous daughters of Cain, and ye shall die the death like them.

Ye shall be tormented with the Prince who fell from the heavenly rank."

298.
The Ark was lifted up from the earth to the height of the waters, and all that was on the earth perished in the deluge;
the waters rose above the tops of the mountains fifteen cubits, by the holy cubit.

The waves bore the ship till they brought it to the lower parts of Paradise.

299.
It was blessed from Paradise; the tops of the waves were rolled back, and they did obeisance before it, then returning from it were poured out to the destruction of those who remained on the earth.

The ship flew on the wings of the wind above the waters from the east to the west, and from the south to the sea, like the sign of the Cross.

It stood above the waters 150 days;
the waves were stilled and laid to rest at the end of the seventh month from the beginning of the Deluge.

301.
The Ark stood upon the mountains, the Kurdish mountains, and the waters were divided from one another.

They all returned to their places, and did not cease diminishing gradually, till the tenth month, which was February.

He looked at the tops of the mountains from the Ark.

On the tenth of March, Noah opened the Ark from the eastern side, and sent the raven, that at its return he might learn the news of the earth. It did not return to him.

303.
He sent the dove; it circled round, and found no place for its foot. It returned at sunset.

304.
After a week Noah sent another dove.

It returned to him with an olive-branch in its mouth.

305.
[Concenring] the Dove there are holy mysteries.

The first dove resembles the first covenant, to which there was no rest among the rejected nations;
the second dove the second covenant, which found rest with the nations that accepted the mysteries of baptism and preached the Christ at the end of 600 years of the life of righteous Noah.

306.
One day of Nisan (April) had passed, and the water was removed from the earth.

On this day Noah and his wife and his sons and his sons’ wives went out of the ship.

307.
Their entrance to the ship had been in separation, their exit from it was in unity.

At their exit came out all the beasts and the cattle and the birds and the creeping things which were in the ship.

Noah built a town, and called it Thamânφ, which remains to this day.

The number of those who were in the ship with Noah was eight persons.

309.
Noah built an altar to the Lord and offered upon it an offering of the beasts and the clean birds that were slain.

God accepted his offering, and gave a covenant that He would not send a deluge of water on the earth to all eternity.

310.
[God] May His names be sanctified, He took off wrath from them in regard to the bow in the clouds.

By it He put away the bowstring of anger; for before the Deluge men saw in heaven the bowstring of anger and the arrow of wrath.

BOOK OF ROLLS [16 - 17.1]

311.

The sons of Noah planted in the town the fruit of the vine, and pressed from it a new drink;
they gave their father Noah to drink, and he got drunk, for he was not accustomed to drink.

While he was drunk he slept, and his nakedness was uncovered.

312.

Ham looked at him, and laughed and mocked at him, and fetched his brothers to mock with him.

When Shem and Japhet knew the reason was about the uncovering of their father, they were grieved at it; they took a garment, threw it upon their hands, and went backwards, lest they should see their father uncovered; then they threw the garment upon him.

When Noah awoke from his drunken sleep, his wife told him what had happened about his sons, and he was angry with Ham, and said,

“Let him and Canaan be cursed, and let him be a slave to his brethren.”

314.

But Noah cursed Canaan, who was not guilty [of his fatthers action], and the guilt was Ham’s; for he knew that when Canaan should arrive at man’s estate, he should renew what had already been blotted out of the works of the children of Cain, the music-halls and such like.

315.

When he came to man’s estate, he did all this, and Noah knew it, was concerned about him and grieved at his work, that according to the example of the works of Canaan, the sons of Seth fell into sin, he increased in his curse of Canaan, wherefore his sons became slaves.

316.

They are the Copts [of Egypt], the Abyssinians [of Ethiopia], the Hindoos [of India], the Mysians [Greeks], and other negroes.

317.

Ham was a hypocrite, a lover of unclean desire all the days of his life.

This was in his mockery of his father.

The sleep of Noah in his drunkenness was a type of the crucifixion of the Christ and His slumber in the tomb for three days, as David the prophet says about it,
“The Lord awoke from his sleep like a man who recovers from strong drink.”

When Noah awoke from his drunken sleep, he cursed Canaan and made his posterity slaves.

Likewise when the Christ arose from the grave He cursed the Devil and destroyed those who had crucified Him, and scattered them among the nations.

320.

The sons of Canaan became slaves for ever, carrying burdens upon their necks.

Every proprietor negotiates riding about on his business, but the children of Canaan negotiate about the affairs of their masters, as poor men on foot, and they are called the slaves of slaves.

321.

Noah lived after going out of the ship 350 years.

When his death came near, there gathered to him Shem, and Ham, and Japhet, and Arphaxad, and Salah.

322.
He made vows for them, and desired the presence of Shem his firstborn, and commanded him secretly, saying to him,

“When I die, bury me.

323.
Go into the Ark of safety, and take out of it the body of our father Adam secretly, let no one with thee know.

Make for it a large chest, and put it within.

324.
Prepare for thyself a store of bread and drink, and carry the chest in which is the body of our father.

Take with thee Melchizedek, the son of Malih.

325.
Verily the Lord hath chosen him from the rest of your sons to minister before our father Adam.

When thou reachest the centre of the earth, bury the body there, and set Melchizedek in the place for the service of the body and the praise before it.

326.
Verily the Angel of the Lord will go before you to guide you two to the place for the body, which is the centre of the earth.

From it shall be seen the power of God.

327.
The four pillars of the world are joined together and have become one pillar, and from it shall be salvation to Adam and to all his children.”

328.
Thus it was written in the tables which Moses received from the hand of the Lord and broke at the time of his anger against his people.

Noah strengthened Shem in receiving the testament, and told him that it was the testament of Adam to Seth, and of Seth to Enos, and of Enos to Cainan, and of Cainan to Mahlaleel, and of Mahlaleel to Jared, and of Jared to Enoch, of Enoch to Methuselah, and of Methuselah to Lamech, and of Lamech to Noah;

330.
he made him swear that no one else should attend to what he commanded in regard to the body of Adam.

When he had finished his testament, he died, being 950 years old, on a Wednesday.

Shem embalmed him, and with him his other children put him on a bier and buried him.

They raised a wail over him for forty days.

332.
Then Shem went secretly into the ship, and took out the body of Adam.

He sealed the ship with his father’s seal.

333.
Then he desired the presence of Ham and Japhet and said to them, “Know that Noah my father commanded me to journey after his death to the elevated land and to go round it to the place of the sea, that I may attend to the state of its trees, and fruits and rivers.

I have already resolved on this, and have left my wife and children with you; take heed to them till the time of my return.”

335.
They said to him,
“Take with thee a man since thou hast resolved on this, for the land which thou hast described has wild beasts and hunting lions.”

336.
He said to them, “Verily, the Angel of God is with me, he is my Saviour.”

His brethren called to him and said, “The Lord be with thee wherever thou dwellest.”

337.
Then he said to them,
“Verily, our father at his death made me swear not to enter the ship nor allow any one else to enter it.

I have received his testament, and sealed it with his seal, and beware that ye enter it not!
ye, nor any of your children.”

They pledged themselves to him concerning this.

338.
Then he approached the father and mother of Melchizedek and said to them,
“I wish that you would give me Melchizedek that I may journey with him in my way.”

They said to him,
“He is before thee, as thou wouldest journey, take him with thee.”

339.
Then Shem called Melchizedek by night, and bore with him the body of Adam secretly.

They went out, the Angel going before them, till he brought them to the place with the utmost speed.

340.
He said to them, “Set him down, for this is the centre of the earth.”

And they put him down from their hands.

The Book of the Rolls

CHAPTER TWELVE

Divisons 341-370

BOOK OF ROLLS [17.2 - 18]

341.
When he came to the ground, the earth was cleft for him as a door, and the body was let down into it, and they put him in it.

When the body rested in its place, the earth returned and covered it over.

342.
The place was called Gumgumah, “of a skull,” because in it was placed the skull of the Father of mankind, and Gulgulah, because it was conspicuous in the earth, and was despised by its sons, for in it was the head of the hateful Dragon which seduced Adam.

It was called also Otâriâ, which is, being interpreted, “the families of the world,” because to it is the gathering together of mankind.

343.
Shem said to Melchizedek son of Malih,

“Know that thou art the priest of the Everlasting God, who hath chosen thee from the rest of men to minister before Him before the body of our father Adam.

Accept the Lord’s choice of thee, and never leave this place.

344.
Do not marry any woman, do not shave thy hair, [nor pare thy nails].

Shed no blood for thyself, and sacrifice no beast.

Do not build a building over this place.

345.
Let thine offerings before the Lord be of fine pure bread, and let the drink be of the juice of the vine.

The Angel of the Lord is with thee for ever."

346.
He wished him peace, and bade him farewell and embraced him, and returned to his dwelling.

Then came to him Jozadak and Malih, the parents of Melchizedek.

347.
They asked him about him, and he told them that he had died on the road, and that he had looked after him and buried him.

His father and his people sorrowed over him with a great sorrow.

When Shem the Righteous was 700 years old, he died, and his son Arphaxad looked after him, and Salah and Eber, and they buried him.

349.
When Arphaxad was thirty years old, he begat Salah his son, and when he was 465 years old, he died, and Salah and Eber looked after him.

They buried him in the town that Arphaxad had built, known as Arphaxad (Arbalsarbat).

350.
When Salah was thirty years old, he begat Eber, and when he had completed 430 years, he died.

Eber and Peleg looked after him; he was buried in the town that Salah had built, known as Saladîb.

351.
When Eber was thirty years old, he begat Peleg, and when he had completed 434 years, he died;
his son Peleg buried him, and Reu and Serug in the town which Eber had built and had called by his name.

352.
When Peleg attained 239 years, all the tribes of the sons of Shem, and Ham and Japhet gathered themselves together and journeyed to the elevated land;
they found in the place known as Shinar a beautiful plain.

They dwelt in it, and their speech was altogether Syriac, and it is called Resany, and Chaldaean; it is the tongue and speech of Adam.

353.
Verily the Syriac language is the queen of languages and the most comprehensive;
from it all other tongues are derived;

Adam is a Syriac name. Whoever asserts that it is Hebrew tells a falsehood.

Speakers of Syriac will not stand on the left of the Lord but on His right, for the writing of Syriac runs from right to left, and of others the way of the Persian from left to right.

355.
In the days of Peleg the nations built the tower at Babel, upon which their tongues were diversified and confounded and divided; because of their confusion the town was called Babel.

356.
Peleg was very much grieved about this when he saw the scattering of the nations in the regions of the earth. He died, and his son Reu, and Serug and Nahor buried him in the town which he had built and had called by his name.

357.
The earth became two portions among two chiefs of tribes;
they allowed to every tribe and tongue a king and a chief;
they appointed in the race of Japhet thirty-seven kings, and in the race of Ham sixteen kings.

The kingdom of the sons of Japhet was from the border of the holy mountain and Mount Nod, which is in the borders of the East, to the Tigris and the side of Algaut:
and from Bactria to the island town (or Gades / Cadix).

The kingdom of the sons of Shem was from the land of Persia, that is from the borders of the East to the Hardasalgs sea among the borders of the West.

They had authority also in the centre of the earth.

360.
When Reu was thirty-two years old, Serug was born to him;
the length of his life being 232 years.

At the end of 163 years of the life of Reu, Nimrod the giant reigned over the whole earth.

361.
The beginning of his kingdom was from Babel.

It was he who saw in the sky a piece of black cloth and a crown;
he called Sasan the weaver to his presence, and commanded him to make him a crown like it;
and he set jewels in it and wore it.

362.
He was the first king who wore a crown.

For this reason people who knew nothing about it, said that a crown came down to him from heaven.

363.
The length of his reign was sixty-nine years.

He died in the days of Reu, and the third thousand since Adam was completed.

364.
In his days the people of Egypt set up a king over them called Firnifs.

He reigned over them for sixty-eight years.

365.
In his days also a king reigned over the town of Saba and annexed to his kingdom the cities of Ophir and Havilah, his name was Pharaoh.

He built Ophir with stones of gold, for the stones of its mountains are pure gold.

366.
After him there reigned over Havilah a king called Hayul.

He built it and cemented it, and after the death of Pharaoh women reigned over Saba until the time of Solomon son of David.

367.
When he (Reu) was 239 years old, he died.

Serug his son and Nahor buried him in the town called Oa‘nân, which Reu had built for himself.

When Serug was thirty years old, his son Nahor was born to him.

368.
In the days of Serug idols were worshipped, and they were adored instead of God, and the people in that day were scattered in the earth;

there was not among them a teacher nor a lawgiver, nor a guide to the way of truth, nor even a right way.

They wandered and were rebellious and became a sect.

369.
Some of them worshipped the Sun and the Moon,
some of them worshipped the sky,

some of them worshipped images, some of them worshipped the stars,
some of them worshipped the earth,

some of them worshipped beasts, some of them worshipped trees, and some of them worshipped waters and winds and such like, for the Devil blinded their hearts and left them in darkness without light.

370.

No one among them believed in the Last Day and the Resurrection.

When one of them died, his people made an image in his likeness, and put it upon his tomb, lest his memory should be cut off.

The earth was filled with sins, and idols were multiplied in it, made in the likenesses of males and females.

The Book of the Rolls

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

Divisons 371-395

BOOK OF ROLLS [19-20]

371.

When Serug was 230 years old he died.

His son Nahor, and Terah and Abraham buried him in the town which Serug had built and called it Serug.

Terah was born to Nahor when he was twenty-nine years old.

372.

In the third year of the life of Nahor, God looked up through His remembrance at His creatures, and they were worshipping idols.

He sent upon them earthquakes which destroyed all the idols.

Their worshippers did not turn from their error, but persevered in their godlessness.

373.

In the twenty-sixth year of the rule of Terah appeared witchcraft.

The beginning of it was that a rich man died; his son made a golden image of him and placed it upon his tomb as a mark to the people of his age, and appointed a young man to guard it.

374.

The Devil entered into the image, and spoke to its guardian from the tongue of the deceased and with his voice.

The guardian told the son of the deceased about it.

After some days robbers entered the dwelling of the deceased, and took all that belonged to his son, and his grief was greater at this, and they bewailed him beside the grave of his father.

The Devil called to him from the image with a voice like the voice of his father, and said, “O my son, weep not.

Bring me thy little son, to sacrifice him to me, and I will restore to thee all that has been taken from thee.”

376.

He brought his son to the tomb and sacrificed him to the Devil.

When he had done this, the Devil entered him and taught him witchcraft, unveiled his mysteries, and taught him omens and auguries.

Since that time people offer their children to Devils.

377.

At the completion of a hundred years of the life of Nahor, God, may His name be exalted, looked on the godlessness of men, and their sacrificing of their children to the Devils, and their adoration of images.

God, may His names be sanctified, sent them raging winds which tore away the images and their worshippers, and buried them in the earth and strewed over them great mounds and towering hills, and they are below these unto this day.

Some assert on this account that in the time of Terah there was a Deluge of wind.

Wise men of India say that these mounds came into existence in the days of the Deluge.

379.
That is nonsense, for image-worship was after the Deluge of water, and the Deluge was not sent upon them for the worship of images;

verily that was done because there was so much corruption on the earth among the children of Cain, and the musical instruments which they invented.

380.
There was no people inhabiting this rough wild land, but when our fathers were not found worthy of the neighbourhood of Paradise they were thrust away to it.

Then they came out of the ship to this land, and were scattered amongst its regions.

381.
He talks nonsense who asserts that these elevated mounds have never ceased in the earth, for they have been formed since the time of the anger of God about idol-worship.

They were turned topsy-turvy, and there is no mound on the earth beneath which a Devil with an image appeareth not.

382.
In the days of Nimrod the giant, he looked at fire from heaven, and fire came up from the earth.

When Nimrod saw it he adored it, and appointed in the place where he saw it people to worship it, and to throw incense into it.

Since that time magicians adore fire when they see it coming up from the heaven and from the earth, and they worship it to this day.

383.
A chief magician named Sasir found a spring of bountiful water at a place in the country of Atropatene.
He [built] upon it a white horse.

384.
Whoever bathed in that fountain worshipped this horse.

The Magi honour the horse, and there is a sect of them who worship it to this day.

385.
Nimrod travelled till he arrived at the land of Marien.

When he entered the city of Alterâs he found there Bouniter the fourth son of Noah.

386.
Nimrod's army was on a lake, and he went down there one day to bathe in it.

When Nimrod saw Bouniter the son of Noah, he did obeisance to him.

387.
Bouniter said to him, “O giant king, why do you adore me?”

Nimrod said to him, “I did thee homage because thou didst meet me.”

388.
Nimrod stayed with him three years that he might teach him wisdom and strategy, then he wandered away from him.

He said to Nimrod, “Thou shalt not return a second time.”

389.
When Nimrod was passing through the East,
he deposited books making known what Bouniter the son of Noah had taught him.

The people were astonished at his wisdom.

390.
There was among the people entrusted with the worship of fire a man called Ardashir.

When Ardashir saw the wisdom of Nimrod and the excellency of his star-gazing (Nimrod had a perfect genius), he envied him for this, and implored a Devil who had appeared to him beside the fire to teach him the wisdom of Nimrod.

391.
The Devil said to him,
“Thou canst not do this until thou have fulfilled the magic rite, and its perfection is the marriage of mothers, daughters and sisters.”

392.
Ardashir answered him concerning this, and did what he commanded him about it.

Since that time the Magi allow the wedlock of mothers, sisters and daughters.

393.
The Devil also taught Ardashir the knowledge of omens and auguries, and physiognomy, and fortune-telling, and divining and witchcraft, which were doctrines of the Devil, and the Chaldeans gave one another this doctrine;

these were the Syrians, and some people say that it is the tongue of the Nabataeans.

394.
Every one who uses aught of these doctrines, his guilt before God is great.

But the knowledge which Nimrod learned from Bounitar, verily Bounitar the son of Noah learned it from God, the great and glorious, for it is the counting of the stars, and the years and the months;

the Greeks call this science Astronomy, and the Persians call it Astrology.

395.
Nimrod built great towns in the East, namely, Hadânien, Ellasar, Seleucia, Ctesiphon, Rehîn, and the towns of Atrapatene, and Telalôn, and others that he chose for himself.

The Book of the Rolls CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Divisons 396-425

BOOK OF ROLLS [21-22]

396.
When Terah, father of Abraham, reached two hundred and three years he died.

Abraham and Lot buried him in the city of Haran.

397.
God commanded [Abraham] that he should travel to the Holy Land.

Abraham took with him Sarah his wife, and Lot his brother’s son, and journeyed to the land of the Amorites.

Abraham the Just was then seventy-five years old.

When he reached eighty years, he fought with the nations and put them to flight and delivered Lot from them, and he had no child at that time, for Sarah was barren.

399.
When he returned from the war with the nations,
God commanded him to journey and pass over to Mount Yâbes.

When he got there he met Melchizedek, priest of God.

400.
When Abraham saw him, he did homage to him and was blessed by him.

He offered before him fine pure bread and drink.

401.
Melchizedek blessed Abraham and made vows for him.

Thereupon God commanded Melchizedek to pare his nails.

Melchizedek consecrated an offering of fine bread and drink.

Abraham offered some of it, and paid to Melchizedek the tenth of his goods.

Then God, may His names be sanctified, discoursed with Abraham the second time and said to him, “Thy reward shall be great with Me.

Since thou hast received the blessing of Melchizedek and thou art worthy to receive from his hand the gift of bread and wine, I will bless thee, and will multiply thy seed.”

404.
When Abraham reached eighty-six years, Ishmael was born to him of Hagar the Egyptian bond-maid.

Pharaoh of Egypt had given her to Sarah, the wife of Abraham, who was his sister by his father but not by his mother, for Terah married two wives;

405.
the name of the one was Yuta,
she was the mother of Abraham, and she died when she gave birth to him;

the name of the other was Nahdeef, and she was the mother of Sarah.

406.
Therefore Abraham answered as he said to the king of Egypt when he wished to do violence to Sarah, that “she is my sister.”

407.
When Abraham reached ninety-nine years,
God came down to his house, and gave to Sarah a son.

When he reached a hundred years, Isaac was born to him, the son whom God gave him of barren Sarah.

408.
When Isaac reached twelve years, Abraham offered him to God as all offering upon the hill Yâbes, which is the place in which the Christ was crucified, and which is known as Golgolah.

409.
In it Adam was created;
in it Abraham looked at the tree which bore the lamb by which Isaac was redeemed from sacrifice, and in it the body of Adam was laid.

In it was the altar of Melchizedek, and in it David looked at the Angel of the Lord bearing a sword for the destruction of Jerusalem.

410.
Verily Abraham’s carrying up there of Isaac to the altar is a type of the crucifixion of the Christ for the salvation of Adam and his children.

The proof of this is the saying of the Christ in the holy Gospel to the children of lsrael, that “your father Abraham did not cease to long to look on my days, and when he saw them, he rejoiced in them.”

411.
The lamb which Abraham saw hanging on the tree was a type of the slaying of the Christ in the body, which He had taken from us, and of His crucifixion also, because the lamb was not the child of a ewe and was worthy of being sacrificed.

412.
In that place Abraham saw what pertained to the salvation of Adam through the crucifixion of the Christ.

In the hour that Abraham took up Isaac to the altar, Jerusalem began to be built, and the reason was this. [sacrificial offering of Isaac by Abraham.]

[Consider also Solomon and the baby]

BOOK OF ROLLS [22]

413.
When Melchizedek, priest of God, appeared to men, his fame reached the kings of the nations, and they came to him from every region to be blessed.

414.
Among those that came to him were Abimelech king of Gerar, Amraphel king of Shinar,
Arioch king of Delassar (Ellasar), Kedarlaomer king of Elam,

415.
and Tidal king of men,
Bera king of Sodom,
Birsha king of Gomorrah, or Simeon king of the Amorites, and Simair king of Saba, Bislah king of Bela, Hiar king of Damascus, and Yaftar king of the deserts.

416.
When these kings, O my son Clement, saw Melchizedek king of Peace and priest of God, and heard his word, they honoured and applauded him and asked him to journey with them to their lands.

He told them that he was not allowed to leave his place, in which God had appointed him to an office.

417.
Their unanimous counsel was that a city should be built for him at their expense, and that they should rule it.

They built for him the Holy City, and delivered it to him, and Melchizedek called it Jerusalem.

Then Maoalon king of Teman journeyed to Melchizedek when his fame reached him, and gave him noble and glorious presents.

He honoured him when he saw him and heard his word.

419.
All kings and nations honoured him and called him the Father of Kings.

420.
Some people think that Melchizedek will not die, and bring as proof the saying of David the Prophet in his psalms,

“Thou art a priest for ever after the figure of Melchizedek.”

David does not wish (to say) in this his saying that he will not die, and how can this be when he is a man?

421.
But God honoured him and made him His priest, and in the Torah there is no mention of a beginning to his days.

Therefore David sang as he sang about him.

422.
Moses does not make mention of him in his book, for he was only relating the genealogy of the Fathers.

423.
But Shem the son of Noah has told us in the books of the testaments that Melchizedek was the son of Malih, son of Arphaxad, son of Shem, son of Noah; and his mother was Jozedek.

424.
In the hundredth year of Abraham there reigned in the East a king called Karmos, he who built Shamshat, and Claudia, and Careem, and Leouza.

425.
He had a son called Cârân and three daughters;
the name of the one being Shamshout, and the other Harzea, and the other Leouza, and he called these cities by their names.

BOOK OF ROLLS [23-24]

426.

When Peleg had reached fifty years,
Nimrod journeyed to the province of Mesopotamia, and built Nisibis, and Raha (Edessa), and Haran; to every city he put a wall, and he called the wall of Haran by the name of Harteeb, [Thebes]

the wife of Sem, priest of the beautiful mountains.

The people of Haran made an image in the form of this Sem, and worshipped it.

427.

Baʻalsameen fell in love with Nalkeez wife of Nimroda, and Nimroda fled before Baʻalsameen; on account of this the children of Israel wept over Nimroda and burnt the city of Haran in anger about him.

When Sarah died, Abraham the famous (or the Friend, (i.e. of God) married a woman named Kentoura, daughter of Yaftour king of the deserts.

429.

When Isaac, son of Abraham, reached forty years,
Eleazar his servant journeyed in search of her who was named Rebecca for Isaac.

430.

When Abraham reached one hundred and seventy years he died;
his sons Ishmael and Isaac buried him by the side of Sarah his wife.

431.

When Isaac reached sixty years, Rebecca his wife conceived Jacob and Esau.

When the birth-pangs took hold of her, she went to Melchizedek;
he blessed her and prayed over her.

432.

He said to her,
"God has already formed two men in thy womb, who shall be chiefs of two great nations.

The elder of them shall be beneath the younger.

433.

Each of them shall hate his brother, and the elder shall serve a man of the race of the other.

I am servant of that man, whose name shall be called 'the living God,' and he shall come up upon a branch of cursing because of those who rebel against him."

434.

When sixty years of Isaac's life had passed, he built a city which he called Ail, and in his sixty-fourth year Jericho was built by the hand of seven kings, the king of the Hittites, the king of the Amorites, the king of the Jebusites, the king of the Canaanites, the king of the Girgashites, the king of the Hivites and the king of the Perizzites, and every one of them built a wall to it.

435.

But the town which was called Masr (Egypt), the king of the Copts had built.

Ishmael was the first to work with a hand-mill, and it was called the mill of the kingdom.

436.
After one hundred and thirty years of the life of Isaac;
that is in the seventy-seventh year of Jacob, God blessed Jacob, and he received the blessings of Isaac, and the blessing of Esau his brother by deceit.

437.
He journeyed to the land of the East.

While he was on his journey, behold, a deep sleep came upon him.

He prepared below his head seven stones and slept upon them.

438.
In his sleep he saw a ladder of fire whose top was in heaven, and its bottom on the earth.

On it Angels were descending from it and ascending, and he saw the Lord sitting on the top.

439.
When he awoke he said, “Doubtless this place is the house of God.”

He took the stones which were beneath his head and built them into an altar and anointed it with oil, and vowed there that he would give to God the tenth of all his goods as an offering.

440.
The power of this vision, O my son Clernent, is not difficult to those who know, for it is a prophecy of the coming of our Lord the Christ.

441.
Verily the ladder which Jacob saw was a sign of the Crucifixion, and the Angels coming down from Heaven were for the Gospel to Zacharia,[and Elizabeth, and John]

[and Joseph] and Mary, and the Magi and the shepherds.

442.
The place of the Lord’s seat at the top of the ladder was like the descent of our God the Christ from Heaven for our salvation, and the place where Jacob saw it was a type of the Church, which being interpreted is, the House of God.

443.
The stones are a type of the altar, and their being anointed with oil a type of the union of Godhead with Manhood.

The vow which he made of a tenth of his goods is a type of the Eucharist.

444.
Jacob journeyed from the place of the vision till he came to the town of his uncle Laban.

He saw a well of water, at which three flocks of sheep were lying down; over the mouth of the well was a great stone.

445.
Rachel, the daughter of Jacob’s uncle, was standing there with the sheep.

Jacob came near to the well, removed the stone from its mouth, and watered the sheep that were with Rachel.

Then he approached Rachel and kissed her.

446.
Jacob’s uncovering of the well was a type of Baptism, which was veiled from of old, and uncovered in the latter days.

That which the priest gives to those whom he baptizes in the water is in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

447.
Know, O my son, that Jacob did not come forward to kiss Rachel until he had uncovered the well and watered her sheep from it.

Likewise, I say that it is not permitted in the law of the Christ for any one to enter the Church till after baptism, for if he is baptized, he has become one of Christ's sheep.

448.
The prophet Moses said in his book that Jacob wrought with his uncle Laban seven years for Rachel, whom he loved of Laban's daughters, for she was at the height of beauty, but he gave him his ugly daughter.

449.
Like this was the story of Moses,
with the Jews whom God saved from the bondage of Pharaoh.

On account of them he did not give the young girl, but he gave her who was old and faded.
[also meaning in part when the people were not set free, and told to work harder]

450.
Verily the first girl whom [Laban] gave to Jacob had ugly eyes, and the second [wife] was perfect in face and had beautiful eyes.

451.
The face of the first [girl] was covered, lest the children of Israel should look at its beauty;

the second had her face uncovered, and had a bright, and shining and beautiful personality.

452.
The girl with ugly eyes who was spouse of Jacob was the type of the people of his day whom he ruled;

in his time there were prophets, and saints and pure ones, and there was little sin in them.

453.
The faded old woman whom Moses describes, she is the people of the children of Israel which went astray in the worship of idols, and left the worship of God;

454. and the girl whose face was covered so that it was not possible for the children of Israel to look at her was the tribe that was established on the holy mount, which did not mingle with the children of Israel, and did not look at them, and if they had looked at it (the tribe), verily they would have imitated its good works.

455.
The better and brighter girl is the tribe which received the Lord of the world, the Christ, and worshipped Him in His Godhead.

He enlightened our hearts by His holiness.

BOOK OF ROLLS [25-26]

456.
When Jacob had reached sixty-nine years, Reuben was born to him, then followed him his brethren whom God brought out of the loins of Jacob;

457. these were Simeon and Levi, Judah the ancestor of Mary, Issachar and Zebulun;

Joseph and Benjamin the sons of the beautiful Rachel;

Gad and Asher, sons of Zilpah;
Dan and Naphtali, sons of Bilhah the maid of Rachel.

458.
Two years after the emigration of Jacob, he returned to Isaac his father.

He lived after that fully thirty-one years of Levi's life.

459.
When he reached one hundred and twenty years his father Isaac died.

Twenty-three years afterwards he journeyed from Haran to the elevated land;

460.
Joseph was sold during the lifetime of Isaac, and he was a companion to Jacob in his sorrow.

After the sale of Joseph, Isaac died;
his sons Jacob and Esau buried him beside the grave of his father Abraham.

461.
After nine years Rebecca died, and was buried near the grave of Abraham.

462.
Judah married Hoshâ‘ the Canaanitess;

Jacob was grieved at that because she was not of the children of Israel, and said to him,

"By the God of Abraham and Isaac, do not mingle the seed of Canaan with us," and he did not accept it from him.

463.
He begat from her Er and Onan, Cod, Othen, and Shelah.

Judah wedded his son Er with Tamar the daughter of Kedar, son of Levi.

464.
Er wrought the deed of the people of Sodom, and God punished him for his deed.

God killed him in answer to the prayer of Jacob, and the seed of Canaan was not mingled with his seed.

465.
Then this Tamar disguised herself, and sat in the middle of the way;
Judah came together with her, not knowing that she was his daughter-in-law;
she conceived by him, and bare Pharez and Zarah.

466.
At this time Jacob and his children journeyed to Egypt, and stayed with Joseph for seventeen years.

When he had completed a hundred and forty-seven years of life he died,
Joseph that day being fifty-six years old.

467.
The wise physicians of Pharaoh embalmed him.

After this Joseph removed his body and placed it beside the bodies of his father and of his grandfather Abraham.

Pharez the son of Judah begat Hezron, and Hezron begat Aram, and Aram begat Aminadab, and Aminadab begat Nahson, who was the most cunning of the sons of Judah.

469.
And Aminadab wedded Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest to a girl, and from her he begat Phinehas the priest, who by his prayer took away death from the people, and whose was the deed with the javelin.

Know that the priesthood was from Aminadab among the people of Israel, and from Nahson the kinghood came among them.

BOOK OF ROLLS [26]

470.
Look, O my son Clement,
how from Judah came the priesthood and the kinghood among the children of Israel.

Nahson begat a son, who is Salmon;
Salmon begat Boaz.

471.
When Boaz was old, he married Ruth the Moabitess;
in her was kinghood, for she was of the race of kings.

She was of the children of Lot.

472.
God did not make Lot unclean for his cohabiting with his daughters, and did not attach blame to him, and did not depreciate his good deed in his support of his uncle Abraham in his exile, and his reception of the Angels in faith, 473.

but He put the kinghood into Ruth who was of his race, so that the Incarnation of our Lord the Christ was of the race of Abraham.

Also into her, the wife of Solomon, son of David, by whom he begat.

474.
Solomon verily had six hundred free women and four hundred concubines, and he obtained no child from any of them, because God, may His name be praised, wished that the seed of Canaan should not mingle with the seed of the chosen people from whom Jesus the Christ took flesh.

The rest of the wives of Solomon were of the children of Canaan.

Nevertheless Moses the Prophet of God related, for the responsible, books, the chronicles of the children of Israel relate, that Levi, when he entered Egypt with his father Jacob, begat there his son Amram the father of Moses.

476.
When Moses was born he was thrown out by his mother into the Egyptian Nile, and Sapphira the daughter of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, saved him from drowning and brought him up in her father's palace.

477.
When he grew up and had finished forty years, he killed Casoum the Egyptian, chief of the swordsmen of Pharaoh. [said elsewhere, to save Joshua]

He fled to Reuel to the priest of Midian for fear of Pharaoh, and that because Sapphira had died before this,
and if she had been still there, why should Moses have been afraid of Pharaoh?

Moses married Zipporah daughter of Jethro, priest of Midian.

She bare him two sons, these were Gershon and Eleazar, at the time of the birth of Joshua the son of Nun, and Moses' age was fifty-two years.

479.
When he had completed eighty years, God spake to him from the thorn bush, and his tongue stammered out of fear for God, and he said,

"O Lord, at the time when thou spakest to thy servant, his tongue stammered."

480.
All his years were 120.

He spent forty in Egypt, and forty in Midian, and he governed the children of Israel forty years in the wilderness.

The Book of the Rolls

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

Divisons 481-515

BOOK OF ROLLS [27-28]

481.
When he died, Joshua the son of Nun governed them thirty-one years.

Then Chushan the Atheist governed them after him eight years.

Then Othniel the son of Kenaz the brother of Caleb, for forty years.

482.
Then the Moabites enslaved the children of Israel for eighteen years.
Then God prepared their deliverance from their hand.

Their government was presided over by Ehud the son of Gera for eighty years.

In the twenty-sixth year of the reign of this Ehud, the fourth thousand year from the beginning was finished. [1300 BC was 2,000 years after Noah]

483.
Then after him the famous Jabin presided over their government for an interval of twenty years, then Deborah and Barak looked after it for forty years.

Then the Midianites conquered them, and enslaved them for seven years, then God saved them by the hand of Gideon.

He presided over their government for forty years; then his son Abimelech for three years.

484.
Then Jufa (Tola) the son of Puah for twenty years, then a daughter of the Gileadite twenty-two years.

Then the children of Ammon conquered the children of Israel and enslaved them for eighteen years, then God saved them by the hands of Jephthah, he who offered his daughter as a sacrifice before God.

485.
And Ibzan governed them for six years, then after him Elon son of Zebulon for ten years.

Then Abdon for eight years.

Then the Philistines fought with the children of Israel and subdued them and enslaved them for forty years, and God saved them by the hands of Samson.

486.
He governed them for twenty years, and after him they remained for twelve years without a leader.

Then there arose to rule them Eli the priest, and he governed them for forty years, then Samuel for twenty-two years.

In his time the children of Israel rebelled against God, and set up Saul as king over them; he was the first king among the children of Israel, and he governed them for forty years.

487.
In the days of Saul appeared the giant Goliath;
he drove out the children of Israel and killed their young men.

Then God sent against him David the Prophet, and he killed him; against Saul He sent the Philistines, and they killed him, because Saul left off seeking help from God, and sought help from devils.

David the son of Jesse reigned over the children of Israel for forty years.

Then after his Solomon reigned over them and did many wonderful things; amongst them his sending to the city of Ophir, and bringing out the gold from its mountains, and ships continued for thirty-six months carrying gold from its mountains.

489.
Also he built the city of Tadmor in the interior of the wilderness, and wrought in it many extraordinary things.

When Solomon passed by Sabad, a building built by Kourhi and Abu Nigaf (they whom Nimrod had sent to Bila‘am the priest when he heard of his occupation with the stars, and he built there this altar to the sun and a stone fort),
Solomon built there also a city called the City of the Sun.

490.
Then Aradus, which is in the middle of the sea, [Cyprus?]
was built at Solomon’s command and they praised him yet more for his wisdom.

There journeyed to him the Queen of Sheba, and she was obedient to his religious worship.

491.
There came up to him at his command Hiram king of Tyre, and had a real love for him;
he had already been a friend to David before him.

His reign was before the reign of David, and he remained to the last of King Zedekiah.

492.
Solomon took one thousand wives, as we said above about him;
and they deteriorated his mind when he exceeded in his love to them, and they got the power to mock at him, and it caused him to slide away from the worship of God;
he sacrificed to idols and worshipped them instead of the Lord.

He died, after reigning for forty years, an idolator and an infidel.

493.
Then Hiram king of Tyre was seduced and forgot his humanity and disbelieved in God, and claimed divinity, and he said, “I sit in the heart of the seas like the sitting of a God”;
and news of him came to Nebuchadnezzar, and he journeyed to him till he killed him.

BOOK OF ROLLS [28]

494.
In the chronicles of the Hebrews, O my son Clement, we learn that in the days of this Hiram appeared the purple dye, and this was that a shepherd and his sheep were on the sea-shore, and he saw a dog of his gnawing with its mouth something that came out of the sea, and its mouth was filled with its blood.

He looked at the blood, and had never seen the like of it.

495.
He took some clean wool and wiped this blood with it;
with that he made a crown and put it upon his head.

It had a brightness like the brightness of the sun or rays of fire.

The news of it came to Hiram; he sent for him and wondered greatly at the beauty of his dye.

496.
He assembled the dyers of his kingdom and gave them a commission for its like, and they were amazed at this, until some of the wise men of his time possessed themselves of the purple shell-fish.

He made garments for himself with its blood, and he rejoiced over this with a great joy.

Thou, O my son, and all the Greeks, disagree with the Hebrews in this narrative.

497.
After Solomon, Rehoboam his son reigned, and defiled the land by the worship of idols, by much whoredom in the city of Jerusalem, and by sacrificing to devils.

In his day the kingdom of the house of David was divided, and became two parts.

498.
In his fifth year journeyed Shishak king of Egypt to Jerusalem, and took possession of all that was in the treasuries of the Lord's house and the treasuries of David and Solomon, the vessels of gold and silver, and he was strengthened by this in his power.

He said to the Jews, "This is none of your earning; it is some of what your fathers brought out of Egypt at the time of their flight."

499.
And Rehoboam the son of Solomon died an infidel, after he had reigned for seventeen years.

Abia his son reigned after him, being twenty years old.

He enslaved Jerusalem and destroyed it, and his mother Ma'ka, the daughter of Abishalom, commended his deeds.

500.
He died after three years, and Asa reigned.

He did right, and abolished the worship of the stars and the images, and whoredom from Jerusalem.

501.
He drove away his mother from his kingdom, because she committed adultery and built an altar to the idols.

There came to him Azârâh king of Hind, and Asa put him to flight, and reigned for forty years, then he died.

502.
After him his son Jehoshaphat reigned, and he went in the way of his father in righteousness, but he loved the household of Ahab, and kept company with them.

He built ships, and sent by them to the land of Ophir to bring gold from its mountains.

God sunk his ships, and was angry with him and his mother Sem daughter of Uriah daughter of Shalom.

503.
When he had died, his son Joram reigned, being thirty-two years of age.

He was disobedient, and sacrificed to devils, on account of his wife Aliah (Athaliah) daughter of Amsir (Omri) son of the sister of Ahab.

He died an infidel.

504.
After him Ahaziah reigned, being twenty years of age.

He was a shameless infidel.

The Lord delivered him over to his enemies, and they killed him after one year of his reign.

505.
His mother took the kingdom to herself, and killed the kings' sons, that thereby she might destroy the kingdom of the family of David.

None were saved from her except Joash, for Jehosheba the daughter of Joram son of Jehoshaphat hid him.

506.
She increased adultery and infidelity in Jerusalem.

She died after seven years, and the people of Jerusalem thought about who should reign over them, Jehoiada knew about that, and their choice fell upon none but Joash whom Jehoiada had hidden.

507.
He sent and brought him out to the house of the Lord;
the warriors completely armed surrounded him, and Jehoiada the priest seated him upon the throne of the family of David his father, he being seven years of age.

His mother’s name was Zibiah of the family of Sheba.

508.
Jehoiada the priest covenanted with him that he should do righteousness before the Lord.

When Jehoiada the priest died, Joash forgot his covenants, and did not know rightly what was administered from the throne of the family of David, nor the shedding of innocent blood.

He died after he had reigned for forty years.

509.
After him his son reigned, and his mother’s name was Jehoaddan.

He killed every one who had killed any one of his household, but spared their sons, for in this he followed the law of the Lord.

510.
He died after he had reigned for twenty-nine years, and his son Azariah reigned after him, being twenty years old.

His mother’s name was Jecholiah.

511.
He did right before the Lord, save that he was bold about the priesthood, for which reason he became a leper, and God weakened the power of Isaiah the prophet from prophecy until this Azariah died, because he did not reprove him for his boldness about the priesthood.

512.
The duration of his reign was fifty-two years, and Jotham his son reigned after him, being twenty-five years of age, and his mother’s name was Jerusha the daughter of Dafma (Zadok).

He did right, and the duration of his reign was sixteen years.

513.
After him his son Ahaz reigned, being twenty years of age;
his mother’s name was Jahkebez the daughter of Levi.

He did wickedly, and sacrificed to devils and idols.

God was angry with him, and Tiglath son of Cardak, king of Assyria, came against him, and besieged him.

514.
Ahaz wrote himself down his vassal, and delivered Jerusalem up to the Assyrians, and he carried all the gold and silver that was in the temple of God to Assyria the regions of Tiglath.

In his time the children of Israel were led captive, and went down to Babylon.

515.
The king of Assyria sent instead Babylonians to the land of Judah to dwell in it; and they complained of what befel them to the king of Assyria, and he sent to them Urijah one of the priests of the children of Israel that he might teach them the law of the Lord.

When they knew it, the lions ceased from them, and went to the land of Babylon and to Samaria.

BOOK OF ROLLS [29-30]

516.

When Ahaz had completed sixteen years [of rule] he died, and his son Hezekiah reigned after him, being twenty-five years old, and his mother's name was Ahi (Abi) the daughter of Zechariah.

He did right and broke the idols, and caused the sacrifices to cease, and cut up the serpent that Moses had made in the wilderness of the wandering (Tih), because the children of Israel were seduced in their worship of it.

517.

In the fourth year of his reign, Shalmanezer king of Assyria came to Jerusalem, and took captive the Israelites who were in it, and drove them away to a place beyond Babylon named Media.

In the twenty-sixth year journeyed Sennacherib king of the province to the cities of Judah, and took captive those whom he found in them and their villages excepting Jerusalem.

518.

Verily it was saved by the prayer and cries of king Hezekiah.

When Hezekiah was ill with his death-sickness, he grieved and wept because he had no son to reign after him;

he prayed before the Lord, and said,

"Lord, have mercy on Thy servant, and do not let him die without offspring;

let not the kingdom fail from the house of David, nor the blessings cease which have come on the tribes in my days."

519.

The Lord answered him, and told him that He had added to his life fifteen years;
he recovered; a son was born to him, and he called him Manasseh.

When twenty-six years of his reign were finished, and he was rejoicing in his son, he died.

520.

His son reigned after him, being twelve years old;
his mother's name was Hephzibah.

He did wickedly, and his infidelity surpassed all the infidel kings that were before him in evil-doing.

He built an altar to idols, and sacrificed to them;
he defiled Jerusalem with corruption, and the worship of idols.

521.

He took Isaiah the prophet, and they sawed him with a wooden saw from the middle of his head to between his feet, because he had reproved him for his wicked deeds.

Isaiah's age that day was one hundred and twenty years, he began to prophesy when he was ninety years old.

522.

Then Manasseh repented about that, and turned to his Lord;
he put on sackcloth, and imposed a fast upon himself all the days of his life.

God accepted his repentance and he died.

His son Amon reigned after him, being that day twenty-two years of age;
his mother's name was Musalmath the daughter of Hasoun.

He did wicked deeds before the Lord, and burned his children in the fire.

523.
He reigned twelve years and he died.

After him his son Josiah reigned, being sixty-eight years of age;
his mother’s name was Arnea, daughter of Azariah son of Tarfeeb.

He kept righteously the feast of the Passover, a feast such as the children of Israel had never kept since the time of the Prophet Moses;
he abolished the sacrifices to the images, broke the idols, sawed them with saws, killed their worshippers, and burnt in the fire the bones of the prophets of the Honoured One.

524.
He cleansed Jerusalem from defilements.
None like him reigned over the Jews before him nor after him.

He remained there for thirty years, but Pharaoh king of Egypt killed him.

525.
After him his son Jehoahaz reigned, being twenty-two years of age;
his mother’s name was Hamtoul the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

Not more than three months of his reign had passed when Pharaoh the lame bound him, made him fast with chains, and carried him to Egypt, and he died there.

526.
After him his brother Jehoiakim reigned, being twenty-five years of age;
his mother’s name was Zobeed, daughter of Yerkuiah of the town of Al-Ramah.

In the third year of his reign Nebuchadnezzar approached Jerusalem, reigned over it, and made him his vassal for three years.

He rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar, and death overtook him.

527.
His son Jehoiachin reigned after him, being eighteen years of age;
his mother’s name was Tahseeb the daughter of Lutanan of the people of Jerusalem.

Nebuchadnezzar journeyed a second time to Jerusalem, bound him after three months of his reign, and carried him and his officers and the armies of his soldiers to Babylon.

528.
Nebuchadnezzar in his first attack had bound the wife of Jehoiakim and other wives of the grandees and nobles of Jerusalem, and carried them to Babylon.

The wife of Jehoiakim was pregnant that day, and in the way she gave birth to Daniel.

In the Captivity were also Hananiah, Azariah, and Mishael, sons of Johanan.

529.
The reason of this Captivity was that Jehoiachin had made a truce with Nebuchadnezzar, then they betrayed one another.

When Johanan died, Zedekiah the uncle of Jehoiakim reigned after him, being twenty-one years of age;
[ ]
the name of Zedekiah’s mother was Hamtoul;
he was the last of the kings of the children of Israel.

*[the seat of all the kings of the children of Israel was Jerusalem;]*

530.
After eleven years of his reign, Nebuchadnezzar journeyed for the third time to the West, to pacify its cities, and the cities of the Euphrates, and of the Great Sea.

He made his way through the islands of the sea, and took captive their people, he laid Tyre waste, and smote it with fire.

He killed Hiram its king as we have already said.

He entered Egypt to seek those of the children of Israel who had fled, and killed its Pharaoh.

531.
He returned by sea to Jerusalem, and was victorious there a second time.

He bound Zedekiah, killed his sons Jerbala and Rahmut, and carried him blind and fettered with chains to Babylon.

This was a punishment from God to him for his deed that he did to the prophet Jeremiah when he threw him into a miry well.

532.
Nebuchadnezzar appointed Jozadan (Nebuzaradan) the captain of his prison in Jerusalem until he had laid waste its wall, and burned the temple of the Lord which Solomon had built in it.

He demolished the rest of the dwellings of Jerusalem, carried all the tools that he found of iron and brass, and the raiment which belonged to the house of the Lord to Babylon.

533.
Between Simeon the High Priest of Jerusalem and Jozadan captain of the prison to Nebuchadnezzar there was love and friendship.

He asked if he would give him the old writings;
he and Simeon carried them with him, being among the crowd of the Captivity.

He saw a well in his way among the borders of the West;
he laid the writings in it, and put with them a bronze vase, filled with glowing coals, and in it sweet smelling incense;
he covered up this well, and went to Babylon.

534.
The devastation of Jerusalem was completed, and it became a waste.

There was not one person in it, nor even a building save the tomb of the prophet Jeremiah.

535.
Jeremiah in his lifetime had dwelt in a place called Samaria;
he commanded a man named Uriah that he should be buried in Jerusalem, and he did it.

It was not known that this place was the grave of Jeremiah except at the devastation of Jerusalem.

The Book of the Rolls

CHAPTER NINETEEN

Divisons 536-565

BOOK OF ROLLS [31-32]

536.
Now for the genealogies.

537.
The Syrians say that no one looked after them after the last devastation of Jerusalem, except among the tribe of the Philistines, and no one looked after the genealogy of the people among whom the children of Israel married, nor from whence was the beginning of the priesthood.

538.
Jehoiachin did not cease to be bound in the land of Babylon, and shut up in prison for thirty-seven years.

539.
Meanwhile there was born to Mardul a son named Mardahi, and the king let Jehoiachin out of the prison, and married him to Helmuth the daughter of Eliakim.

By him she gave birth in the land of Babylon to a son, who was called Salathiel.

540.
Then he married another who was called Melkat the daughter of Ezra the teacher, and had no child by her in Babylon.

541.

At that time Cyrus reigned in Babylon.

He married Masabet the sister of Zerubabel a nobleman of the Jews, according to the custom of Persia; he let her rule his affairs; she begged him to restore the children of Israel to Jerusalem, and he did this to its place where it had been before him.

542.

He commanded a herald to proclaim, that there should not remain one of the children of Israel, who should not present himself to Zerubabel his brother-in-law.

When they were gathered together, he commanded him to take them to Jerusalem and that they should build it.

543.

The children of Israel returned to Jerusalem in the second year of the reign of Cyrus the Persian.

At that time was completed the fifth thousand from the beginning.

544.

The children of Israel after their return to Jerusalem remained without a teacher to teach them the law of the Lord or any writings of the prophets.

When Ezra saw this, he went to the well in which the Law had been put, uncovered it, and found the vase full of fire and incense, and he found the writings faded, there was no means to get them.

God revealed to him that he should receive of them from His hands;
he succeeded, and threw it on his mouth once, and twice and thrice, and God put into it the power of the spirit of prophecy;

546.

he kept all the writings, and that fire which was in the vase in the well was from the fire of Paradise which was in the house of the Lord.

547.

Zerubabel journeyed to Jerusalem as king over it.

548.

By Joshua son of Jozadak the High Priest and by Ezra, the writing of the Law and the Books of the Prophets were completed.

549.

After their return, the children of Israel kept the feast of the Passover, and all the feasts that they celebrated were three.

550.

The first was the feast of Moses in Egypt,
the second the feast of Josiah, and the third after their return from Babylon in the days of Cyrus the Persian.

551.

The number of the years of the Captivity which Jeremiah the prophet mentions are seventy years.

552.

The children of Israel built the temple of the Lord in Jerusalem, and its building was finished by the hands of Zerubabel and Joshua the son of Jozadak the priest, and Ezra the scribe of the Law, in six and forty years.

553.

When the books of the genealogies were destroyed, the fathers were in despair about genealogy, and there was despair about it after them, until their accuracy was guaranteed by the secret books of the Hebrews.

554.
I relate this to thee, my son Clement, that when Zerubabel journeyed to Jerusalem, he married Malka the daughter of Ezra the teacher, and by her he begat a son called Abiud.

She had already been the wife of Jehoiachin before him.

555.
When Abiud grew up, he married Ragib, daughter of Joshua the son of Jozadak the priest.

By he he begat a son called Jehoiachim.

556.
Jehoiachim married a wife, and begat a son by her.

When he grew up, he married Alfeet, daughter of Hesron, and by her he begat Zadok.

557.
Zadok married Felbin the daughter of Rahab, and by her he begat Atin.

Atin married Hesheeb, daughter of Jula, and by he he begat Tur (Eliud).

Tur (Eliud) married Salsin, daughter of Hasoul, and by her he begat Eleazar.

Eleazar married Habeeth, daughter of Malih, and by her he begat Manar (Matthan).

559.
Manar (Matthan) married Seerâb, daughter of Phinehas, and by her he begat two sons in [one] womb.

One of them was Jacob, who was called by two names, Joachim son of Yartâh.

560.
Jacob maried Had the daughter of Eleazar, and by her he begat Joseph.

Joachim married Hannah, daughter of Ka‘rdal, and by her he begat Mary, by whom our Lord the Christ was incarnate.

561.
On account of our knowledge, O my son Clement, about the genealogy of the Lady Mary, and the genealogies of her ancestors, the Jews begin by assertions about us that we do not understand the genealogies, and we do not know them;

and they venture to mock the mother of Light, the Lady Mary, the Virgin, and they attribute her genealogy to fornication, 562.

because they do not know that it was the Holy Ghost who came down on us, a company of twelve in the upper room of Zion, who taught us all that we need to know about the genealogies and the rest of the mysteries, as He had taught Azariah (Ezra) the teacher all the Law, so that he kept it and renewed it.

563.
Let the mouths of the cursed Jews now be stopped, and let them know assuredly that Mary the pure was of the race of Judah, also of the race of David, also of the race of Abraham;

that they have nothing against the genealogies which the Holy Ghost taught us,

and there is not a book left in their hands from which they can make a stand against genealogy, since their books have been burnt three times;

the first time in the days of Antiochus, who defiled the temple of the Lord, and commanded sacrifices to idlos;

the second by Herod at the time of the devastation of Jerusalem;

565.
and the third, hear, O blessed son, what the Holy Ghost has revealed to me, about the sixty-three fathers, whose names are registered, and how the pedigree came about to the tribe from which was incarnate our God the Christ.

BOOK OF ROLLS [33]

566.
The beginning of genealogies.

Adam begat Seth.

567.
Seth married Aclima, sister of Abel, and by her begat Enos.

Enos married a woman called Hita, daughter of Mahmouma of the sons of Har son of Seth, and by her begat Cainan.

568.
Cainan married Karith, daughter of Kersham son of Maheâl, and by her begat Mahlaleel.

Mahlaleel married Teshabfatir, daughter of Enos, and by her begat Jared.

569.

Lamech married Kifar, daughter of Jutab son of Methuselah, and by her begat Noah.

571.
Noah married Haikal, daughter of Mashamos son of Enoch, and by her begat Sem.

Sem married Leah, daughter of Nasih, and by her begat Arphaxad.

572.
Arphaxad married Fardou, daughter of Salweh son of Japhet, and by her begat Salah.

Salah married Muldath, daughter of Kahin son of Sem, and by her begat Obed (Eber).

573.
Obed (Eber) married Rasdah sister of Melchisedek, daughter of Malih son of Arphaxad, and by her begat Peleg.

Peleg married Hadeeb, daughter of Hamlâh, and by her begat Jareu (Reu).

Jareu (Reu) married Tanaa‘b, daughter of Obed (Eber), and by her begat Serug.

Serug married Feel, and by her begat Nahor.

575.
Nahor married a wife, A‘âkris daughter of Reu, and by her begat Tarah.

Tarah married two wives, one of them Juta, and the other Salmat, by Juta he begat Abraham and by Salmat Sarah.

576.
Abraham married Sarah, daughter of this Salmat his father’s wife, and by her begat Isaac.

Isaac married a wife called Rebecca, daughter of Fathâel, and by her begat Jacob.

577.
Jacob married Leah, daughter of Laban, and by her begat Judah.

Judah begat Pharez by Tamar.

Pharez son of Judah married Afdeeb, daughter of Levi, and by her begat Hesron.

Hesron married Farteeb, daughter of Zebulon, and by her begat Aram.

579.
Aram married Safuza, daughter of Judah, and by her begat Aminadab.

Aminadab married Baruma, daughter of Hesron, and by her begat Nahshon.

580.
Nahshon married Aram, daughter of Adam, and by her begat Salmon.

Salmon married Saleeb (Rahab), daughter of Aminadab, and by her begat Boaz.

581.
Boaz married Aroof (Ruth), daughter of Lot, and by her begat Obed.

Obed married Nefut, daughter of Shela, and by her begat Asse (Jesse).

582.
Asse (Jesse) married Amrat, daughter of Othan, and by her begat David.

David married Balseba‘ (Bathsheba), daughter of Joutân son of Shela, and by her begat Solomon.

583.
Solomon married Naama, daughter of Maheel, and by her begat Rehoboam: who had none like him.

Rehoboam married Naheer, daughter of Al, and by her begat Abia.

Abia married Maachah the daughter of Abishalom, and by her bcgat Asa.

Asa married Auzbah the daughter of Shalih, and by her begat Jehoshaphat.

585.
Jehoshaphat married Na‘mna the daughter of Amon, and by her begat Joram.

Joram married Tala‘ia, daughter of Amoi, and by her begat Ahaz.

586.
Ahaz married Suma the daughter of Balhi, and by her begat Amaziah.

Amaziah married Kama, daughter of Caram, and by her begat Uzziah.

587.
Uzziah married Jerousa, daughter of Zadok, and by her begat Jeream (Jotham).

Jeream (Jotham) married Jahfat, daughter of Hani, and by her begat Ahaz.

Ahaz married Ahir, daughter of Zachariah, and by her begat Hezekiah.

Hezekiah married Hephzibah, daughter of Jarmoun, and by her begat Manasseh.

589.
Manasseh married Artida, daughter of Azuriah, and by her begat Aman.

Aman married Tarib, daughter of Murka, and by her begat Josiah.

590.
Josiah married Hamtoul, daughter of Armeed (Jeremiah), and by her begat Jehoahaz.

Jehoahaz married a woman and had no sons by her.

591.
Jehoiakim reigned after the death of his brother, and married a woman called Carteem, daughter of Haluta, and by her begat Salaeel (Salathiel).

Salaeel (Salathiel) married Hamtat, daughter of Eliakim, and by her begat Zerubabel.

Zerubabel married Malkut, daughter of Ezra, and by her begat Armeed (Abiud).

Armeed (Abiud) married Awarkeeth, daughter of Zadok, and by her begat Jachim.

Jachim married Hali, daughter of Zurniem, and by her begat A‘zor.

A‘zor married Afi, daughter of Hasor, and by her begat Sadoc.

594.

Sadoc married Faltir, daughter of Dorteeb, and by her begat Asham Joteed.

Joteed Asham married Hasgab, daughter of Jula, and by her begat Liud (Eliud).

595.

Liud (Eliud) married Shabshetin, daughter of Hubaballia, and by her begat Eleazar.

Eleazar married Hanbeth, daughter of Jula, and by her begat Mathan.

596.

Mathan married Seerab, daughter of Phinehas, and by her begat Jacob.

Jacob married Harteeb, daughter of Eleazar, and by her begat Joachim, known as Jonahir.

597.

Joachim married Hannah, and returned to the house of Eleazar.

And after sixty years of his marriage to her, he begat by her Mary the Virgin, her by whom the Christ became incarnate.

Joseph the Carpenter was the son of her [paternal] uncle Laha, and therefore his vote did not fall against her when Ram, priest of the children of Israel, delivered her to a man who should be surety for her.

599.

It was in the hidden work of God (may He be glorious and exalted!) and in the mystery of His knowledge that there was no escape from the Jews reproaching Mary the pure on account of her bearing the Christ.

600.

To our Master and our God and our Lord Jesus the Christ be praise and power and greatness and dignity and worship with the Father and the Holy Ghost from now unto all time and throughout all ages.

Amen.

Abstract:

Sources of the research: The Mandaean holy books and scriptures in addition to old Moslem writers and contemporary western scholars' works.

The purpose of the research:

The research aims to translate the Mandaean Story of Creation, directly from the Mandaean manuscript. Four other Ginza manuscripts from the Oriental and India office at the British Library in London were used to compile a critical apparatus of variants. Book three, or the Book of Creation, is the largest tractate of the Mandaeans' holy book the "Ginza Rba". The Ginza names this tractate as raza usidra qadmaia ḏ-šuta haita qadmaita "The Mystery and the First Book of the First Living Doctrine". This tractate includes the cosmogony; the origin of the World of Light and the World of Darkness, the rise of the First Great Life, the Second Life (Yōšamin), the Third Life (Abatur) and the Fourth Life (Ptahil); the Demiurge who created the cosmos and Tibil (the earthly world). It also narrates the creation of the Mandaean redeemer Manda ḏ-Hiia ("Gnosis of Life") and his descent to the Underworld and his triumph against the forces of darkness. It narrates the creation of Adam and Eve and the descent of the nišimta (soul) into the 'ṣṭōna (the human body). Tractate three also includes an elaborate description of the demonic Rūha and her planetary sons and her attempts to seduce Adam in order to entrap him in the world.

The research consists of three parts:

(1) The introduction: The Mandaeans and the Question of Their Origin, The Mandaean system, The Main Characteristic Rituals of the Mandaeans, The Mandaean manuscripts.

(2) Analysis of the narrative: The First Account of the Story of Creation, The Second Account of the Story of Creation, The Third account of the Story of Creation.

(3) The Transcription and Translation of the Manuscript.

Acknowledgments

With my deepest gratitude, I would like to thank everyone who has helped me throughout every aspect of my research, and a special thanks to Wingate Scholarship and their administrator Ms. Faith Clark for their encouragement and financial support. I am especially indebted to Professor Mark Geller of the Hebrew and Jewish Studies Dept at UCL, for his excellent guidance and support during my research.

I would also like to thank the Mandaean Priests Rabi Rafid al-Sabti (Holland), Rabi Salwan Shakir (Sweden) and Yalupa Salim al-Kuhaili (Iran) for their much appreciated help and advice, Dr. Abdul-Atheem al-Sabit (UK), Dr. Qais al-Sadi (Germany), Mr. Carlos Gilbert (Australia), Mr Majid Arabi (Sweden), Mr. Sa‘ad Dehays (U.S.A) and Mr Eli Timan (UK) for their valuable counsel and support. And finally my family who has stood by me patiently and consistently supported my efforts.

§ 1. Introduction

§ 1. Introduction

§ 1.1 - The Mandaeans and the Question of their Origin:

In the hot and marshy areas along the Tigris and Euphrates in the southern Mesopotamia and along the Karun River which flows through the lowland of Iran (Khuzistan) and, like the Tigris and Euphrates, empties into the Shaṭ-al-Arab and then into the Gulf, there dwells a small community of Mandaiia, Mandaeans ("Gnostics"). Their Arab neighbors call them Ṣubba, derived from ܨܒܥܐ (צבע) "to immerse or submerge", and refers to their frequent baptism "maşbuta".[1] The Qur'an mentions the al-Ṣabʿiūn الصابئون in three sūra along with the Jews and Christians.[2] The Moslem historians called them the Ṣabians [3] of the swamps (صابئة البطائح) or al-Mughtasila (المغتلسة) "those who wash" and they were numerous in the swamps and in the region of Dast-i Maysan.[4] Almasʿūdī tells of a Ṣābian sect called Kīmāriyyūn (الكيماريون) which was located between Wasiţ and Basra. He also reported that the Şabeans were related to Şabi bn Mitšolaẖ bn Idris or Şabi bn Mari at the time of Abraham[5]. Al-Nadim mentioned many baptist sects who were living in southern Iraq such as: the "Dashtim", the "Muhājirūn", the "Kašţiūn", the "Mughtasilah", the "al-Hasīh" (Elchasites) and "Şābat al-Baţā'ih".[6] Macuch asserts that the Mandaeans actually settled in southern Mesopotamia and had many names. In Mesene (Maisan) especially they were called by their proper name "Mandaeans and Maškənaeans" and their script and dialect was called maišānā'it "Messenian" i. e. "Mandaic".[7]

[1] SA p. ix. Mani points out that he was living amongst the "Sabaios" which is clearly derived form Aramaic sobai which means baptist (Gardner and Lieu, 2004: 65).

[2] The Qur'an mentioned the Ṣabians in three suras: baqarah no. 62, haj no. 15 and ma'ydah no. 69

ان ّ الَّذِينَ آمَنُواْ وَالَّذِينَ هَادُواْ وَالنَّصَارَى وَالصَّابِئِينَ مَنْ آمَنَ بِاللَّهِ وَالْيَوْمِ الآخِرِ وَعَمِلَ صَالِحاً فَلَهُمْ أَجْرُهُمْ عِندَ رَبِّهِمْ وَلاَ خَوْفٌ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلاَ هُمْ يَحْزَنُونَ {62} البقرة

But the Arabs wrongly translated "şb'" צבע as the Arabic صبا 'to convert' instead of Aramaic "şb'" צבע 'to dye' or "submerge". Therefore, Arabic literature still wrongly calls them "those who converted."

[3] Islamic historians referred to all pagans as "Ṣābians," whether Babylonians, Greek, Egyptians or Romans.

[4] المغتسلة: هؤلاء قوم كثيرون بنواحي البطائح، وهم صابئة البطائح، يقولون بالاغتسال ، ويغسلون جميع ما يأكلونه . ورئيسهم يعرف بالحسيح ، وهو الذي شرع الملة ، ويزعم ان الكونين ذكر وأنثى، وأن البقول من شرع الذكر ، وأن الأكشوث من شرع الأنثى وأن الأشجار عروقه ، ولهم أقاويل شنيعة تجري مجرى الخرافة ، وكان تلميذه يقال له: شمعون ، وكانوا يوافقون المانوية في الأصلين ويفترق ملتهم بعد، وفيهم من يعظم النجوم الى وقتنا هذا (أبن النديم ، الفهرست 1994 ص 414).

The Mandaeans call themselves bhirī zidqa "the righteous elect" and 'Naşoreans' (naşuraiyī),[8] i.e. "guardians" or "possessors" of secret rites and knowledge "Naşiruta."[9] The Mandaean society, before the Moslem conquest of Iraq, consisted of two classes: (a) the priestly clan or the Naşoreans; that is the inner circle of the priests and their novices, and (b) the laymen clan or the

"The Mughtasilah: These people are very numerous in the region of al-Baţā'ih, they are [called] the Şābat al- Baţā'ih. They observe ablution as a rite and wash everything which they eat. Their head is known as al-Hasīh [Elkesaites] and it is he who instituted their sect. They assert that the two existences are male and female and that the herbs are from the likeness of the male, whereas the parasite plants [al-uksūth] are from the likeness of the female, the trees being veins (roots). They have seven [shameful is the right translation] sayings, taking the form of fables. His [al-Hasīh] disciple was named Sham'ūn. They agreed with the Manicheans about two elemental [principles], but later their sect became separate. Until this our day, some of them venerate the stars." (The Fihrist of al-Nadīm, translated and edited by Dodge, London, 1970: 811) Lady Drower asserts that the "Elkasaites were once closely related to Naşoraeans" (SA, p. 97).

[8] Sometimes the heavy 'ş' is written by none Mandaeans as 'z', Nazorenes. (SA p. ix) This term was used by the Jews to designate Christians (Peters, 1972: 668).

[9] Rudolph 1983: 343. Drower defines Naşiruta as "esoteric religion within a religion, a gnosis within gnosis, and its heart is the interpretation which it attaches to sacramental acts" (SA p. xv).

Mandaeans who form the greater number of the sect.[10] Although they revered John the Baptist and occasionally mention him in some prayers, their relation to him is still problematic because they consider him "teacher" or "reformer" and never the founder of their faith.[11] In fact there is no mention of a founder of Mandaeism in all their writings.[12] After the Islamic invasion the priestly school which was teaching the esoteric principles of the "Naşiruta" diminished gradually and could no longer fight the new elements of transformation. Eventually, the majority of the Mandaean population had to convert to Islam due to persecution and a heavy poll tax.[13]

No one can determine the first appearance of the Mandaeans in Mesopotamia, and the question of their origin is still one of the continuing mysteries of Mandaeaen research. After nearly two centuries, this issue still raises much controversy amongst scholars. Some, like Nöldeke, Brandt and Lidzbarski, assert a pre-Christian existence to the Mandaeans, others like Pallis prefer a late dating, i. e. 6th century C.E.[14] In fact, Lidzbarski envisaged a Mandaic migration from the Transjordan towards Parthia in the first century even before the destruction of the Jewish kingdom in 70 C.E.[15] Some Arab historians dates the Mandaeans (Ṣabeans) back to the very end of Babylonia, such as al-Birūni (11th century) who wrote, "the Ṣabiyūn are the remnant of the Jewish tribes who remained in the days of Cyrus and Artaxerxes. These remaining tribes adopted a system mixed up of Magianism and Judaism like that of the Samaritans in Syria."[16] Although the Mandaeans believe they are bhiria zidqa "the chosen righteous ones", they admit all nations generated from the Jews: mn ama d̲iahuṭaiia kulhun amamia ubabia minaihun npaq "from the Jews all nations and sects came forth."[17] In addition, the Mandaean scroll "Haran Gawaita" states clearly that the Naṣoraeans had indeed migrated from "Jerusalem" to the ṭaura d̲Mi̲dai "the Median hills" under the protection of the Parthian king "Artabanus":[18]

[10] Cf. the Manichaean community which was divided into an inner circle of the elect ('the virginal') and the greater number of hearers or catechumens ("the continent") (Gardner and Lieu, 2004: 23). Shaked stated, "Mandaean doctrine was restricted to people deemed to possess a higher type of piety just as in Manichaeism and Mazdakite movement" (Shaked, 1994: 75).

[11] Yamauchi, 1970: 80 ff.

[12] In this respect Drower comments, "For the Mandaeans there was no founder to reverence, no great prophet to single out as leader, no human saint upon whom to pinpoint devotion."(Drower, "Mandaen Polemic", BSOAS, Vol. 25, (1962), pp. 438-448, esp. p. 438).

[13] Brandt writes: "The disintegration of the community after the Islamic invasion led, by means of the compilation of the divergent tractates and traditions, to the present-day disorder in the Mandaean religion. The "little college" of priests was dispersed throughout Mesopotamia and could no longer overcome the disunion" (Brandt, 1889: 58 cited by Rudolph, HR, vol. 8, 1969: 212).

[14] Pallis believes that all Jewish names and ideas mentioned in the Mandaean writings are derived from Islam (Pallis, 1926: 118).

> "Haran Gawaita (The Inner Haran) received him and that city in which there were Naṣoraeans, because there was no road for the Jewish rulers. Over them was King Ardban (Artabanus). And sixty thousand Naṣoraeans abandoned the Sign of the Seven and entered the Median hills (ṭura d̲Midai), a place where they were free from domination by all other races. And they built [15] Lidzbarski, Ginza p. x. See also Rudolph, 1969: 213. Neusner believes that the Mandaeans were subject to a kind of persecution in Hasmonean times, or during the war of 66-73 against Rome (Neusner J., JAOS, 1975: 184-190, esp. p. 188).

[18] Rudolph points out that this migration was towards the north-west Iran between Harran and Nisibis or Media during the period of the later Arsacids (1st or 2nd century C.E.) Rudolph, 1983: 364. Coxon points out that Ardashir I, who became king in the year CE 208, conquered Mesene (Characene) and established the Sasanian suzerainty after a decisive battle against Artabanus V in C.E. 224 (Coxon, JSS, 1970: 17).

cult-huts (bimandia) and abode in the Call came to their end.."[19]

The great difficulty in studying Mandaeism is one of chronology. Despite the fact that much has been written about their origin and much speculation, the Mandaeans are the only Gnostic group who call themselves explicitly "Mandaeans" which equals the Greek "gnostikoi". In fact they are the only Gnostic sect which is still in existence. Other Gnostic groups in Egypt, Syria and Palestine vanished, long ago. Many scholars believe that the Mandaeans (Naşoreans), among other "heterodox groups," who flourished in the East were not native movements but rather "migrated there in the hope of escaping the waves of repression that periodically swept the West."[20] It was in Mesopotamia, in contact with the traditions and faiths of Persia, that these Naşoreans adopted dualism and became Mandaeans "Gnostics".[21] Some Mandaean hymns and writings (other than Haran Gawaita) verify their exodus from the West and their arrival at Babylon in the East. The following hymn speaks of a kind of reunion between those Naşorean immigrants (from Jerusalem) and their kinfolks in Babylonia:

[21] Beyer states, "Mandaic was adopted by Naşoraeans, a Gnostic/Baptist community, after they had left Palestine (Jordan area) in the 1st century C.E. as a result of the hostility of contemporary Judaism and had migrated at the latest in the middle of 2nd century C.E. via northern Mesopotamia (Haran/Charrhae) to southern Babylonia (Mesene, Kuzistan)" (Cited by Müller-Kessler Ch., ARAM, Vol. 16, 2004: 51).

> From the home of the great community therein, I became the healer for souls! I became a healer for souls who heals but takes no fee. I set forth, came and reached the gates of Babylon. Of the children of Babylon there were some who shut their doors on seeing me: There were some who shut their doors. And there were those who opened their doors. Those who shut their doors hated Life and loved death and will be held back in the Abode of Darkness. Those who opened their doors loved Life and hated Death, they hated Death and loved Life. They will rise up in purity and will behold the Place of Light.[22]

It seems that the Naşoraeans flourished in Babylonia under the Parthian kingdom and dwelt, like the other Baptist and Gnostic sects (e.g. Elchsaites and Manicheans) in central and southern Babylonia in towns such as Kutha, Borsippa, Nippur[23] and Purat-Maysan.[24] As soon as they settled down they got acquainted with the magic and astrology of the Chaldeans and the astrology of the Babylonians.[25] Hence, they became the soothsayers and "masters" of incantations in Mesopotamia, from whence originated "the most interesting magic formulas in Eastern Aramaic."[26] The Sasanians brought their flourishing to an end when the Zoroastrian state under Shapur I (241-272) began the persecution of "foreign" religions such as Christianity, Judaism, Manichaeism and Gnosticism, and ordered the destruction of many Mandaean temples.[27] Kardir (late 3rd century C.E.),[28] tells us in his inscription at naqsh-i-Rustam how he initiated a religious persecution of great severity throughout the Persian Empire against the other religions such as Manicheans, Jews, kristyānē Christians, nāṣorāyē Naṣoreans etc.[29] This inscription can be taken as a solid evidence of the existence of the Mandaeans in Mesopotamia, along with other Baptist/Gnostic sects at that time in Sasanian Iraq. In this respect Quispel writes: "The Mandaean problem has become an open question again since Torgny Säve Söderbergh has shown that the Manichaean Psalms of Thomas were based upon extant Mandaean hymns, thus proving that the Mandaean sect in Iraq must had a very long prehistory."[30]

In the sixteenth century, the Mandaeans of Iraq and Iran came to the attention of the Western world through the Jesuit missionaries, who accompanied the Portuguese armada in the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf, and came into contact with the Mandaeans in and about Basra and in Khuzistan.[31] The Jesuits thought that they discovered the "heretical Christians of St. John," but to the disappointment of the monks they could not convince the Mandaeans, except for a few, to join the Christian faith. But they succeeded in recruiting some of them as mercenaries and interpreters who sailed with the Portuguese fleet to the Strait of Hormuz, Masqat, Goa, Ceylon and even to Portugal itself.[32] When the Portuguese witnessed the persecution of the Mandaeans at the hands of the Moslems,[33] the Portuguese reached an agreement with the Pasha of Basra to move the Mandaeans to the Christian lands, but the Pasha went back on his word and did not allow the Mandaeans to leave and the exodus came to a halt.[34]

Conclusion:

According to the Mandaean manuscript "Haran Gawaita"[35] and other historical records, distinguished Semitic scholars, such as Lidsbarski, contented that Mandaism (literature and cult) is influenced strongly by the Old Testament and can only have originated in Jewish circles.[36] We might, therefore, conclude that the Naṣoraeans were either a heterodox Jewish sect or the followers of John the Baptist, who did not convert to Christianity, and they fled to the east before the fall of Jerusalem in C.E. 70 because they were persecuted by the Jews.[37] Having first settled in northern Mesopotamia (Haran),[38] they moved to the Median hills of old Parthia and finally settled in Babylon and southern Mesopotamia, where they still live. This migration might explain the cultural influences of Judaism, Christianity, Zoroastrianism and the old Babylonian religion on the Mandaean writings.

(ii) The world of mšūni kušṭa[39] and the tangible world of Tibil (earth). According to their belief, the Mana Rba "the Great Mana" (Intelligence), who dominates the World of Light, issued Hiia Qadmiia "the First Life" from the great yardina "Jordan" of Life. In turn, the First Life submitted a request to himself and created a son of his own whom he called Hiia Taniania "the Second Life" or "Yōšamin". The Second Life became infatuated with the idea of creating a world of his own. He, therefore, transferred his defecting tendency to his son Abatur "the Third Life". Abatur opened the gate of the World of Light, and as soon he gazed into the abyss (or: darkness) Ptahil "the Fourth Life", came into being. Ptahil, who received a mandate from his father Abatur, descended to the black waters, consolidated arqa "the earth" and created the material world. On the other hand, the Lord of Darkness created a kingdom for himself with demonic beings of monsters, dragons, evil spirits and most of all the "Seven" (planets), and the "Twelve" (signs of the Zodiac) and their mother, the goddess of Darkness "Rūha". As a counter move, the World of Light created Manda ḏ-Hiia "Gnosis of Life"[40] in order to put an end to the defection of the uthras "beings of the World of Light" and to conquer the evil forces of the World of Darkness.

[37] The Mandaeans always define themselves as the followers of John the Baptist (Yahia Yuhana) in Jerusalem (SA, p. vi). According to Josephus, John the Baptist had "an astonishingly persuasive power over the Jewish populace" (Mead, 1924: 4).

[38] For the Mandaean polemic toward Christians, see Drower "Mandaean Polemic", BSOAS, (1962) pp. 438-48, esp. pp. 439-440, which might allude to their reason for moving from Haran.

Ptahil, with the assistance of Rūha and her entourage, tried to create Adam but they could not succeed to make him stand on his feet. Therefore, Ptahil went back to the World of Light and brought from his father the nišimta "soul" and cast it into Adam's body. Only then Adam stood on his feet and became aware of his existence. The core of the Mandaean's soteriology is the deliverance of the nišimta "soul" from the perishable body. When death occurs the soul leaves the body and begins a long journey through the maṭaratia "watch-houses" or "purgatories" before reaching its final destination; alma ḏnhura "the World of Light".

[40] Manda ḏ-Hiia: Gnosis of Life and the Mandaean Redeemer (See below §2.3.2).

There are minor resemblances between the Mandaean story of creation and the Babylonian one such as the creation of the savior and his fight against the forces of evil. These resemblances led scholars, such as Brandt, to believe that Mandaeism is an off-shoot of the late Babylonian religion; he even assumed that Mandaeism was the centre from which the Ophite [41] and similar Gnostic system issued. [42] Lady Drower dedicated the introduction of her book "Secret Adam" to the Naşoraeans and their exodus from Palestine, which she dates to just after the destruction of the 2nd temple. She also discusses their possible relationship with Jewish-Palestinian groups.[43]

§ 1.3 - Mandaism and Gnosticism:

In addition to the resemblances between Mandaeism and the Babylonian religion, we find striking parallels between the Mandaic Gnostic motifs and the motifs of the other Gnostic sects such as the Hermetists and the Valentinians especially in the area of the redeemer and the ascent of the soul.[44] Gnosticism, the most problematic of cults, is first clearly attested in the second century C.E., but its exact origin is still of great controversy among scholars.[45] It gathered momentum in the following century and spread to [44] Jonas writes, "The celestial journey of the returning soul is indeed one of the most constant common features in otherwise widely divergent systems, and its significance for the gnostic mind is enhanced by the fact that it represents a belief not only essential in gnostic theory and expectation, and expressive of the conception of man's relation to the world, but of immediate practical importance to the Gnostic believer, since the meaning of gnosis is to prepare for this final event, and all its ethical, ritual, and technical instruction is meant to secure its successful completion" (Jonas 1958: 165).

[45] Godwin, J., 1981: 84. Rudolph points out that "The beginning and end of Gnosis in late antiquity cannot be pin-pointed exactly. It makes appearance at the beginning of the Christian

Egypt and to the Fertile Crescent.[46] Some contemporary scholars, such as Quispel, believe that Gnosticism is neither the product of the Greek philosophy nor "a fossilized survival of old Iranian or even Indian religious concept."[47]

According to the Mandaean manuscript Haran Gawaita Mandaeism "Naṣoraeanism" struck roots in Mesopotamia when a tendency to relegate the gods of the old religions and to adopt the Persian dualism at the dawn of the first millennium when the country was under the Parthian-Sasanian dominion.[48] Mandaeism and other baptist gnostic-type movements must have been around much at that time.[49] Some hypotheses say that the Naṣoreans, who settled in East Jordan, became under the persecution of both the Jews and Christians, and for that reason they sought refuge in a friendlier atmosphere of Parthia and Media hills and from there they moved down to Babylon and southern Mesopotamia.[50] Naṣoreaanism preserved the old Gnostic tenet that the world is created by foolish creator or demiurge, who himself came into being as a result of an error and that the soul is a "spark" from the World of Light has to be redeemed and sent back to its origin, along with many indications of syncretistic Judaism. Many distinguished scholars [51] conclude that Naṣoraeanism (Mandaeism) is a heretical Jewish sect and its members are the "ultimate descendant of the Palestinian baptists of New Testament times and the period immediately preceding."[52] The divorce between this sect and official Judaism perhaps took place during the first and the second centuries C.E.[53] This defection of the Naṣoraeans from Judaism is documented in one of the rarest Mandaean passages which is connected with the consecration of a priest:

> And then he spoke and taught about the man who becomes a priest on earth and who leaves lay life for priesthood, like the soul which quits Judaism for Mandaeaism. For before it is baptized an infant dwells in an abode of Judaism, and a guardian-spirit of Light sits beside it (lit: sits on its neck) guarding it and awaiting its delivery from the snares of the Jews.[54]

[51] Such as: Rudolph 1983: 362, he also writes: "in the context of the Jewish wars of independence and the growing consolidation of Judaism after the destruction of Jerusalem (A.D. 70), its position in opposition evidently led to persecutions of the community and ultimately to its emigration from the Jordan territory to the east." (Ibid pp. 363-4), Lidzbarski, Ginza, 1925: vi, Lidzbarski, Mandäisce Liturgien, 1920: xix, Lidzbarski, Das Johannesbuch der Mandäer, 1915: xvi, Drower, SA, p. x ff., Deutsch, ARAM, 11-12 (1999-2000), pp. 209-223, esp. 212. Drower states: "there is often a polemical interchange of (ṭ) with (d) when scribes refer to Jews. Here either could be meant, as the two letters frequently replace one another. (In Ginza Rba Judaism is yahduta.) The polemical world-play on YHṬ and YHD is commented on by Lidzbarski (ATŠ, p. 255 n. 8).

The following text is another significant clue which may suggest that Mandaeism was a heterodox Jewish sect who chose to adopt Gnosticism "Mandaeism":

> He said to them: "The first kušṭa (oath) is a precious kušṭa; it is the promise made at baptism which takes the soul out of its yahuṭuth ('Judaism') into Mandaeism."[55]

The Mandaean tale of Miriai, the Jewish princess who left her religion and joined the Mandaeans, also shows a possible connection between the earliest Mandaeans and Jewish sectarians of the Second Temple period.[56] Other Mandaean writings from the Ginza such as the eleventh book of the Right Ginza "the Mystery book of Great Anoš (Enosh)" and book twelve, identifying the speaker as the "great Anoš", possess discernible links with the antique Judaism.[57]

The evolution of Mandaeism was summed up by H. –M. Shenke in three points: (1) originally the Mandaens were a heretical Jewish baptismal sect, one among many. (2) The Mandaeans then accepted a Gnostic view. (3) This gnosis was finally institutionalized.[58]

[57] Reeves, 1996: 143. Concerning the history of the Mandaean textual corpus he stated: "If a clear connection can be established between the Codex "apocalypse" passage and Mandaean Enosh material, an important step would be taken toward an improved understanding of the religio-historical relationship linking a number of Syrio-Mesopotamian religious communities" (Ibid, pp. 143-4). Reeves also adds: "The amazingly close correspondence in language between the Codex passage and the Mandaean texts is extraordinary, bolstering the growing suspicion that they derive from a common textual corpus" (Ibid, p. 147). On the other hand the Mandaeans accused the Jews of not observing the laws of impurity at all. (GRR, book XI. See also Lidzbarski, Ginza, pp. 224-5 where Kiwan "Saturn" is the god of the Jews).

We may outline the main parallel and different features of the Mandaean Gnostic system and the general Gnostic system according to the following table:

§ 1.3.1 - General Parallels and Differences between Gnosticism and Mandaeanism:

Gnosticism	Mandaeanism
1. The Gnostic system is based upon the dualistic opposition between the transcendental world of the "fullness" (pleroma) embracing the High God and the Aeons, his inferior emanations, on the one hand, and, on the other, the "emptiness" (kenoma), the planetary and terrestrial world inhabited by man.	1. The Gnostic system of the Mandaeans is based upon the opposition between the transcendental (nukraiia) world of Light embracing hiia rbia qadmaiia "the First Great Life" (or: the King of Light) and the uthras, his inferior emanations, on the one hand, and, on the other, the world of Darkness, the Seven planets (šibiahia) and terrestrial world (tibil) inhabited by man.
2. The kenoma came about because of some crisis in the pleroma, whereby the lowest of the Aeons on the emanation scale, a female figure	2. The physical world came about because of the crises caused by the Second Life "Yōšamin" and his sons the uthras when they decided to create a Abatur (the Third Life) lapsed out of the world of Light, and in his confusion and dissatisfaction, produced Ptahil (the Fourth Life). Ptahil created the world with the help of Rūha and her sons the Seven planets who ruled the world.

3. The spark or spirit (pneuma) of the divine pleroma which fell into man must be regained and restored to its rightful place on high.	3. The soul nišimta or mana which fell into man must be regained and restored to its rightful place; the World of Light.
4. An Aeon (Jesus) is sent down to redeem the innermost part of every man's pneuma through suffering.	4. The messenger Manda d-Hiia (Gnosis of Life) or Enosh-Uthra is sent down to lead the nišimta (soul) to its final destination through gnosis "knowledge" and "awakening."
5. Gnosticism is optimistic towards the destiny of man and pessimistic towards the universe.[59]	5. Mandaeanism is optimistic towards the destiny of the nišimta (soul) of man and pessimistic towards the physical world "Tibil".

§ 1.4 - The Main Characteristic Rituals of the Mandaeans:

> "The great importance which the Mandaeans attribute to their cult practices shows their special character even more clearly. It is not "knowledge" alone that redeems but the cultic rites, primarily baptism and the "mass for the dead", are necessary for salvation."[60]

§ 1.4.1 - ࡌࡀࡑࡁࡅࡕࡀ Maṣbuta (Baptism)

The central cultic rite of the Mandaeans is baptism or "immersion" ࡌࡀࡑࡁࡅࡕࡀ (maṣbuta, pronounced maṣwatta). It is the immersion in the fluid of Life which gives the promise of eternal life to the nišimta "soul".[61] The rite of baptism had the esoteric significance of an initiation into the mystery of gnosis. To the Mandaean water is the medium which most fully expresses the mystery of being, or of the Being which is semi personified as the 'Great Life', and a river is the equivalent of the heavenly 'Jordan' flowing in the world of light:[62] Thus ࡌࡉࡀ mia "water" originates in (Life) and conversely ࡄࡉࡉࡀ hiia "Life" originates in water. By performing baptism in the yardina "river" the Mandaean enters a into laupa "union" with the World of Light. Thus, the

Mandaean is protected from the powers of death, purified from pollution and defilement and also receives forgiveness for his transgression.[63]

In addition to the immersion in the running water, the full baptism includes the sacrament of oil, bread, and water, the hand-grasp and kiss called 'giving kušṭa'[64] and the final blessing by laying the right hand of the priest on the head of the baptized person. Besides the full baptism there are two lesser water rites which are performed without priestly assistance:

1. rišama: prayers recited daily, with covered head, just before sunrise; after evacuation of the bowels. At this stage no priest is needed.
2. ṭamaša: the second ablution is a triple complete immersion in the river, also performed without ministration of a priest. It must be performed immediately after any kind of pollution (coition, nocturnal pollution, touching an unclean person) and after any serious defilement such as touching the body of a dead person. It must be also performed by a woman after menstruation and after child birth.[65]

Some scholars believe that certain roots of the Mandaean baptism is related to the Jewish rule such the prohibition of baptism and other rites on the Sabbath and on the mbaṭṭal (inauspicious) days.[66] But repeated baptism was a common feature among the different gnositc sects of Babylonia such as the Elchasaites who were attacked by Mani for their daily baths.[67] The Mandaean baptism is unique of its kind and did not come into being as a reproduction of the Christian-Syrian, especially Neșțorian rite. "In fact it is possible that certain characters go back to a pre-Christian period and have their origin in the lustral and baptismal practice of unorthodox Judaism, i.e. in the so-called baptismal sects (Mașboteans, Șebueans, cf. Șābeans)."[68] Other Gnostics such as the Ebionites and Hemerobaptists also performed repeated baptism.[69]

This act is concluded by a kiss, each of the two persons kissing his own right hand when the hand is released. (c) A being, a personification of truth and good faith (ATŠ, p. 12).

The pliability of the research in the field of Mandaeism is always ambushed by the ambiguity of some terms and characters.[70] In baptism we are faced with an indefinite personality of bihram rba "Bihram the Great" as we read in the following baptismal formula:

> "I have baptized myself with the baptism of Bahram the Great, son of the Mighty Ones. My baptism shall protect me and attain the end (or: be successful). The name of Life and the name of Manda ḏ-Hiia be pronounced on me."[71]

[67] For Mani's confrontation with the baptists see Henrichs, 1973: 43. In respect of the ritual immersion in Babylonia, Drower writes: "Ritual immersion was ancient indeed in Babylonia, and during Iranian domination shrines had been built on the Tigris and Euphrates to the water-goddess Anahita, who under her Semitic name Nanai or Nanaia is still invoked in Mandaean exorcism books" (SA, pp. 104-5).

Bihram, as it seems, is the core of the ritual, but he does not play any significant role in the Mandaean mythology. It is obvious that Bihram is a Persian name associated with some Persian kings,[72] and with the Persian god Bahram or Vahram.[73] We have no evidence, whatsoever, to prove that the Bihram mentioned at the Mandaean baptism is a human being who established the sect, as implied by some. Others, like Segelberg, hypothesized that when the Mandaens settled in the East during the Sassanian period they replaced the name of Yohana "John the Baptist" with Bihram in order to legitimize the new religion to the rulers of the country.[74]

In addition to the main baptism, which is performed in every religious event including marriage, the Mandaeans perform a minor ablution (baptism) to the dying person. After the priest performs rišama "the minor ablution", the mortally ill person is dressed in his rasta (ritual dress), and a small myrtle wreath is inserted in the little finger of his right hand and he is watched carefully day and night so that he not die unclean. At the end of the rišama the priest recites some prayers, while some members of the dying person's family bring water from the river. When death approaches, the dying person is undressed and doused three times from head to foot. They lift him and place him on clean bedding facing the North Star.[75] Then they cloth him in a new rasta and wait for his nišimta (soul) to depart his body. [76] In the past other Gnostic sects such as the Valentinians and the Marconsians used to perform this kind of baptism for their dying people.[77]

[72] Bihram I, Bihram, Birhram III and Bahram IV (Zaehner, 1955: 38 ff).

[73] About this ambiguous figure, which is closely associated with the Mandaean baptism, Drower writes: "His name is Iranian (Avestan Vəδəθaγnα) and the Mandaean Bihram may be the Persian genius of victory (New Persian Bahrām < Middle Persian Varhrān) . . The presence of the banner at Mandaean baptism may be connected with Bihram's banner of victory" (SA p. 65). Vahram or Baharam (Verethraghna), the yazata "is the Persian god of the planets and victory who was created by Ahura and became the great champion against demons" (Boyce, 1975: 54, see also Zaehner, 1955: 220). Lupieri suggests that the Mandaeans who lived in Characene since the second century must have chosen Bihram (the deity of Maisan) as eponymous deity of their baptism (Lupieri, 2002: 163 f.).

§ 1.4.2 - ࡌࡀࡎࡉࡒࡕࡀ The Masiqta (Ascent of the Soul)

The Masiqta is the second major ceremony of the Mandaeans and it, too, includes immersion in "Jordan" (river, running water), anointing with oil and crowning with the myrtle wreath. It is the Naşoraean mass dedicated to those who die "unclean" without the proper ceremony of the dead. The Mandaean has to die clean wearing his white ceremonial outfit in order to join his heavenly dmuta "image, counterpart": "I go to meet my image and my image comes to me: it caresses and embraces me as if I were returning from captivity."[78] The Mandaeans believe that a man who dies in a violent death suffers long and painful delay in the maṭaratia (watch-houses) before moving into the next world. Therefore, a masiqta "ascension" ceremony has to be performed three days after the death of the believer in order to assist nišimta "the soul", by furnishing it with a new body, with which it could enter the World of Light.[79] For the Mandaeans the fate of the nišimta is the main concern, because pagra "the body" cannot rise to the world of Light and eventually integrates back into the earth.[80]

The masiqta is a long ceremony, which requires the presence of, at least, three priests: a ganzibra[81] "head-priest", a tarmida "priest" and a šganda "assistant". The preparations for this ceremony start on Saturdays only and the main ritual takes place on Sunday.[82] The main ingredients of masiqta "ascension" are the recitation of certain prayers from the Left Ginza, and a sacramental meal. The meal includes unleaved bread, [83] different kind of fruit and nuts, fish, and a tiny piece of sacrificed white dove-flesh (ba).[84] There must be fresh myrtle and a large bowl of water just filled from the yardina "river".[85] The recitations are continued at fixed intervals until the end of the forty-five days' journey of the soul.[86] There are at least nine major variants of the Mandaean masiqta:

1. The Bukra: the first masiqta performed by a priest after ordination. 2. The masiqta of newly-consecrated ganzabra. 3. The Dabahata or Ţabahata:

The masiqta of Adam: for one who has died on one of the major mbaṭṭal days, such as New Year's Day. 7. The masiqta of Samandri'il: for a person who has died of burns, or has fallen from a tree or been drowned. 8. The masiqta of kanat: for a woman who dies during pregnancy. 9. masiqta of hai-šūm: for a person who died as a result of a snake bite. There are other masiqta for a bride-groom who died during wedding ceremonies and for moving the remains of a dead person.[87]

While the masiqta is intended essentially for the dead, it is also applied to living. A masiqta is performed in the ceremony of initiating a new priest. The ašualia "novice for priesthood" dedicates a masiqta to his rabi "teacher" and pronounces his name at a certain point in the ritual where the name of officiating priest has to be indicated.

§ 1.5 - The Mandaean Calendar

The Mandaeans have a lunar year, which is divided into twelve months of thirty days each, with five intercalary days named Parwanaiia,[88] which fall between Sumbulta "Virgo", the 8th month, and Qaina "Libra" (Tišrin), the 9th month. The beginning of the "Panja" festival changes depending upon the movements of lunar months in the year.[89] The Mandaean calendar is a 365-day calendar consisting of twelve 30-day months, with 5 epagomenals inserted at the end of the 8th month. This compensation takes place during the Parwanaiia (or: Panaja = five days) which is celebrated by the Mandaeans during the five intercalary days between the end of the month Šumbulta (Ellul) and the beginning of Qaina (Tišrin).[90]

During the five days preceding, no religious ceremony except a funeral may be performed, and no undertaking of importance should be begun, for these are considered to be "days of darkness".[91] They are followed by the five intercalary days mentioned above, called "days of light". Mandaeans are forbidden to pray after sunset at other times of the year, but during the nights of Parwanaiia darkness is considered non-existent, and praise and prayer flow continually. Barriers between this world and the world of Light are down.

The Mandaeans believe that in the five days of the Parwanaiia (Panja) five celestial beings of Light were created, and that consequently the doors of the world of Light are open during these five days. The beings of light are:

[89] The term Panja means the five Gatha days, also called Khamsat al-mustariqat, was used in the Persian as well as in the Sistanian calendars during the 5th century (See Taqizadeh, "The Old Iranian Calendar again", BSOAS, Vol. 14, No. 3, (1952), pp. 603-611, esp. p. 608).

[90] The old Iranian calendar (of 12 months of 30 days and 5 supplementary days) are still in use in many districts of Kashan, Natanz, Maima, Javshagan, and the in the province of Yazd. (Ibid, 610).

[91] The Mandaeans think the five days preceding intercalary days particularly ominous, because they are dedicated to the evil spirits of death and darkness.

Marad-Rabuta, Manda d̲-Hiia, Šišlam-Rba, Adam-Shaq and Hibil-Ziwa.[92] Although this calendar could have been borrowed from the Zoroastrians at any time in the early Middle Ages, further characteristics of the Mandaean calendar suggest earlier origins that would pre-date the Middle Ages, the Sassanians, and even Mandaeism itself. The twelve months of the Mandaean year grouped and named according to four seasons (e.g. the first month of the year is called awal sitwa, "first of the winter") but also bear Babylonian (Aramaic) names of months. The month Nisan designates the 3rd month of the year, exactly as in the Sogdian calendar, but incongruously since Nisanu is the 1st month of the Babylonian year.

The twelve months of the Mandaean year are divided into four seasonal divisions: Sitwa (winter), Abhar (spring), Giṭa (summer), and Paiz (autumn). The months are also named according to the signs of the Zodiac: Daula "Aquarius" (Šabat), Nuna "Pisces" (Adar), Ambra "Aries" (Nisan), Taura "Taurus" (Ayar), Ṣilmia "Gemini" (Siwan), Ṣirṭana "Cancer" (Tammuz), Arya "Leo" (Ab) Šumbulta "Virgo" (Ellul), Qaina "Libra" (Tišrin), Arqba "Scorpio" (Mašrwan), Haṭia "Sagittarius" (Kanun), Gadia "Capricon" (Ṭabit). Each year is named after the day which it began, e.g. the Year of Habšaba, the Year of Sunday; or Year of Rahaṭia, Year of Friday. The Mandaean New Year is called Dihba Rba.[93] The Mandaeans count the 24 hours of a day and night as beginning at dawn, i.e. Tuesday is followed by Tuesday night: "the night of Tuesday" to an Arab, on the contrary, means the night preceding Tuesday.

The Mandaean calendar has the additional incongruity of beginning the year with the winter season, whereas the Persian-Zoroastrian New Year is normally associated with the spring. The Persian-Zoroastrian New Year coincided with early winter in the 1st century B.C.E., so the essential names of Mandaean months may have been instituted in this period.[94] The Mandaeans are the only non-Iranian people who adopted the old Iranian calendar, along with quite a number of other beliefs, of the later Sasanian period i.e., the time of Khosrau the Great (sixth century) without the slightest change.[95] But the Mandaeans did not use the Persian names of the months and kept the Semitic ones, as mentioned above.

The main purpose of the Mandaean calendar is to determine the ominous and auspicious times. The Mandaeans believe in two kinds of ominous (mbaṭṭal) days: (1) Minor mbaṭṭal "ominous": on these days the Mandaeans are not allowed to slaughter animals, but are allowed to eat meat of slaughtered animals on the day before. (2) Major mbaṭṭal "ominous": Slaughter of animals or eating meat is not allowed during these days; only vegetarian food.[96]

§1.6 - Mandaean Feasts

§1.6.1 - ࡐࡀࡓࡅࡀࡍࡀࡉࡉࡀ Parwanaiia (Panja)

As mentioned above, the most important of the Mandaean's feasts is the Parwanaiia[97] (or: Panja) which is celebrated during the five intercalary days between the end of the month Šumbulta (Ellul) and the beginning of Qaina (Tišrin). Five days before the Panja, or the last five days of Šumbulta, are considered major mbaṭṭl (ominous days), for they are dedicated to the five lords of Darkness, but the period Panja is the happiest time of the whole year. As noted above, the Mandaean year is divided into twelve months of thirty days each and a month with five intercalary days. These five days are called Parwanaiia and the Mandaeans believe that in the five days of the Parwanaiia (Panja) five celestial beings of Light were created, and that consequently the doors of the world of Light are open during these five days. Those ࡍࡐࡀࡒࡀ nfaqa "out of the body" (dead), are with their loved ones and share in communion (laufa) with them ritual meals eaten in their names. The five days of the Parwanaiia are called hamša iuma d̲paruaniia d̲hinun dukrana "the five days commemoration".[98] The perfected souls of ancestors and spirits of life and light have special powers at this time to help the living. Should a person have the food fortune to die during the sacred five days, he or she will pass quickly through the purgatories (or: watch-houses) to the world of light. On the last day of the feast, special ceremonies are performed by the priests for those who, during the past year, died in a state of impurity, or not wearing ritual garment. Sheep are slaughtered for lay feasting and charity, and a small piece of sheep's fat is placed on zidqa brika (Holy Oblation) tables. Every man, woman and child should be baptized and all share in sacraments which commemorate the dead.[99]

§1.6. 2 - ࡃࡉࡄࡁࡀ ࡓࡁࡀ Dihba Rba

Dihba Rba is the Mandaeans' New Year festival, celebrated at the beginning of Daula (Šabat), the first month of the Mandaean year. They also use the Persian name Nauruz Rba for this festival. New Year's Eve is called Kanši uZahli "cleaning and lustration". On this day sheep and chicken are slaughtered, bread is baked and kept in the house, jars and pots are filled with water enough for thirty-six hours. All day, till sunset (paina d̲-Dahba Rba), the priests baptize the faithful. Thirty-six hours before the second day of Daula (Šabat), i.e. the night before the New Year and the first of the New Year, is called the Day-of-Lacking, during which period priests and laymen retire into the house, where they must remain without going outside, no matter for what purpose, and no religious ceremony can take place. The reason given for these precautions against pollution is this: For the Mandaeans, the New Year honors Mana Rba Kabira and how he completed his work of Creation. On this day, the spirits of light gather together to embark on a twelve hour journey to visit the Great Mana and show their appreciation towards him. Abatur closes his door, Nidbai and Šilmai forsake their posts as the guardians of running waters; Hibil, Šitil, and Anuš depart; the dwellers in Mšunia Kušṭa (the parallel pure world) with Adam Kasia (Secret Adam) at their head and their guardian spirit Šišlam Rba (the dmuta of Hibil-Ziwa) all rise into the infinite worlds of light. They travel by the "vehicles of Light" and this celestial journey takes them twelve hours. They reach the realm of Light at the dawn of the New Year and spend the next twelve hours praying and praising the Great Ones. Their journey back covers the next night.

[99] Drower, Water into Wine, 1956: 37-8.

While the guardians are gone, the world is left defenseless and all sources of nature, including trees and rives, become exposed to the forces of evil and death. Therefore, the Mandaeans take extra measures to protect themselves from pollution by staying at home praying and meditating for thirty-six hours. On the third day of the feast (the second day of the new year) the invisible guardians having returned, the vigil is over and there is a general jubilation. The Mandaeans gather in the mandi "temple" to greet the ganzibra "high-priest", and listen to his portents for the year. Then they go to visit Mandaean families that have recently lost a loved one to console them and assure them that they are not alone in times of difficultly. Once this is done, they feast and make merry.[100]

[100] For more details on this feast see Drower, 1956: 34 ff.

§1.6.3 - ࡃࡉࡄࡁࡀ ࡃࡔࡉࡔࡋࡀࡌ ࡓࡁࡀ (ࡃࡉࡄࡁࡀ ࡃࡔࡅࡔࡉࡀࡍ) The Dihba d- Šišlam Rba or the Dihba d-Šušian

The Mandaeans also call this feast Nauruz Zūṭa (Little New Year) which takes place on the 6th day and the 7th of the first month. The night between these two days is called "the night of power"[101] and then, if a man is pious, the gate of Abatur is opened for him in a vision and he obtains whatever he may ask. However, if he is really pious he does not ask worldly favours but freedom from sin and spiritual gifts, and the result is not immediately seen. The priests visit the Mandaean families and hang on the door of every house a wreath of willow and myrtle, which remains there till the next year and is thought to protect the Mandaeans from evil. In return, the Mandaeans donate a small fee to the priests.

§1.6.4 - ࡃࡉࡄࡁࡀ ࡄࡍࡉࡍࡀ The Dihba Hnina or Dihba Ṭurma (the little feast)

This feast takes place on the 18th of Taura (Ayar) and lasts for three days. Baptism should take place and the dead be remembered by lofani or ritual meals. Dihba Hnina celebrates the return of Hibil-Ziwa form the underworlds to the worlds of light. It is a cheerful feast and commemorates creation. Hibil-Ziwa's marriage to Zahariel (the female spirit of the underworld) results in the birth of Ptahil (the demiurge who created the cosmos). On the first day of this feast they visit each other and have a special breakfast together which consists of rice, yogurt and dates.

[101] The Moslems celebrate a similar occasion on the night of the 27th of the fasting month "Ramadan" which they call lailat elqadr "the Night of Power". They believe the gate of heavens open in this night and some of the believers' wishes come true.

§ 1.7 - ࡋࡅࡈࡀࡕࡀ ࡅࡒࡉࡓࡉࡀࡕࡀ luṭata uqiriata Curses and Incantations

A large number of Mandaic magic bowls, lead and gold amulets were found in Mesopotamia during the 19th and 20th century, and have reached the Western world through archeologists and antique dealers. We cannot determine a dating for this magic material but most scholars believe that they belong to period between the 2nd and the 6th century C.E. The writings on the terracotta magic bowls survived because they were written with a special kind of "permanent" ink. The ink diuta ࡃࡉࡅࡕࡀ is made, according to a secret recipe, by the scribes themselves, who are often the priests.[102] To the Mandaeans writing is a sacred art and the letters of the alphabet represent the powers of life and of light. Hence, Mandaeans look upon their alphabet as magical and sacred. Writing is under the special protection of the planet Nabû[103]. Letters of the alphabet, inscribed on twenty-four scraps of silver or gold, are placed under the pillow of a person who desires heavenly guidance in some matter of difficulty.[104]

[102] The following recipe was given to Drower by a Mandaean priest during her stay in Iraq: "Mix glue with river water, let it melt, and then evaporated for six days. On the seventh, pound it with powder charcoal in the portion of one mithqal (nearly 4.8 gm)of charcoal to 25 glue, for four or five days. Mix with water to a smooth paste, and after evaporation it will form crystals. These, mixed with river-water (yardina) to from ink. The Asut Malka (a prayer recited before all baptisms and ritual meals, and rites) should be read over it" (MII p. 23).

The bowls contain valuable information of mythical tales of Late Antiquity including early forms of liturgy, mystical literature and Mandaean textual material.[105] They also reflect the Mandaean belief and creed.[106] The purpose of these magic bowls and rolls is to throw a protective spell against enemies, capture demons, and repulse curses and avert evil eye, over the clients for whom they were written. Incantations were of various kinds and shapes; some were for health and others as love talismans.[107] The Mandaeans possessed a large collection of charms and magical prescriptions, and when written down they formed a real "Book of Magic". The most famous "magic" book is Asfar Malwāšā (Book of the Zodiac) which deals with a system of astrology based on the Signs of the Zodiac based on astrological literature of the Babylonians.[108]

The magic roll is of two kinds. The larger is not easily carried on the person. It is usually called a ࡒࡌࡀࡄࡀ qmaha. The smaller, for which the word ࡆࡓࡀࡆࡕࡀ zrazta is usual though not invariable, is written minutely on a long strip of paper from 2 – 3 inches wide, tightly rolled and inserted into a small gold or silver case so tat it may be suspended round the neck from a string or chain. The astrological name of the person for whose protection the roll has been written recurs throughout together with invocations of the powers of light and life for himself, his family, his possessions, and his trade.[109]

The Mandaeans, like the Babylonians, lived lives of fear because they believed in the existence of myriads of fiends and devils which caused sickness and death to themselves and damage to their material property.[110] The phantoms of ghosts of dead men were greatly feared in Babylonia, even more so than among the Mandaeans. It was necessary for the living to offer food, perform rituals, and recite incantations in order to propitiate potentially vengeful ghosts, who were as often as not their relatives.[111] The people clung to the use of amulets and the art of incantations thrived in Mesopotamia. The Mandaeans became the masters of this art, and the originators of the most interesting magic formulas in Eastern Aramaic.[112]

The official Mandaean religion condemns the worship of the old Babylonian planetary deities, even though popular magic has seen fit to invoke their aid. The Seven (planets) and the Twelve (signs of the Zodiac), mentioned in many of the holy writings, may be treated as allies and friends. Pašra ḏ-Šambra (a love charm) addressed to Libat (Dilbat, Ištar) which begins frankly, "In the name of Libat, mistress of gods and men". Antagonistic references to the planets and signs of the Zodiac also appear, sometimes in same phylactery.[113] The planets are considered little better than demons since actions swayed by emotion are harmful to the soul, and fault committed under planetary influence must be expiated after death in the ࡌࡀࡈࡀࡓࡀࡕࡀ maṭarata (s. maṭarta ࡌࡀࡈࡀࡓࡕࡀ), realms equivalent to purgatories. The Mandaean view is that after death the soul has to pass through a number of posts of stations, maṭarata, before it reaches the scales of judgement. M*aṭarata* serve as places of purification for the soul proceeding towards the Realm of Light, and each is in charge of a keeper or keepers.[114]

Many of the divine figures and demons are mentioned in the Ginza are invoked in the Mandaean incantations and amulets, such as: ࡄࡉࡉࡀ 'the Life', ࡌࡀࡍࡃࡀ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ manda d-hiia 'the gnosis of Life', ࡄࡉࡁࡉࡋ "Hibil", ࡉࡀࡅࡀࡓ "Yawar", ࡔࡉࡁࡉࡀࡄࡉࡀ "the (Seven) Planets", ࡉࡅࡔࡀࡌࡉࡍ "Yōšamin", ࡐࡕࡀࡄࡉࡋ "Ptahil", ࡂࡀࡁࡓࡉࡀࡋ Gabriel, ࡔࡀࡌࡉࡔ Šamiš, ࡊࡉࡅࡀࡍ "Kiwan" ࡁࡉࡋ "Bel" ࡍࡁࡅ "Nabu" or "Nbu" ࡍࡉࡓࡉࡂ "Nirig" or "Nergal" ࡋࡉࡋࡉࡕ "Lilith", ࡃࡉࡅࡉࡎ "Dewis" ࡐࡕࡀࡊࡓࡉࡀ "Idol-spirits" ࡓࡅࡄࡀ "Rūha" ࡀࡎࡈࡉࡓࡀ "Stira" (Ištar) "Venus-Libat" ࡀࡃࡅࡍࡀࡉ "Adonai" etc. These names and more are also found in the other chapters of the Ginza and in the other Mandaean texts.

In 1905 Mark Lidzbarski published a lead amulet which he dated about 400 C.E. It is considered the earliest of all Mandaic writings. The writing was inscribed with a nail, and the letters are very small.[115] The scroll would be rolled up and worn in a container. Lady Drower believes that the lead strip was immersed in water and the water swallowed by the person to be cured or exorcised.[116] The following lines from Lidzbarski's lead amulet invoke most of the divine and demonic names mentioned above (notice the guttural ࡏ: ע is not dropped in the name of Manda d̠-Hiia):

The first Mandaic bowl inscription was published by Pognon, the French consul at Baghdad in 1892. The bowl came from Bismaya (Adab) south of Nippur.[118] The exterior is inscribed with: . . . [illegible] . . . [illegible] "Bound . . . of the crescent-spirit . . ." and the interior begins with: . . . [illegible] "In the name . . ." the text ends with the typical Mandaean doxology: ࡅࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡆࡀࡊࡉࡍ "And Life is Victorious". Almost every incantation and amulet begins with the opening phrases: ࡁࡔࡅࡌࡀࡉࡄࡅࡍ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡓࡁࡉࡀ "In the name of the Great Life", ࡀࡎࡅࡕࡀ ࡆࡓࡀࡆࡕࡀ ࡅࡄࡀࡕࡀࡌࡕࡀ "May there be health, armament and sealing", ࡆࡄࡉࡀ ࡅࡃࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡋࡅࡈࡀࡕࡀ "Averted and driven away are the curses"; ࡆࡄࡉࡀ ࡊࡅࡋࡄࡅࡍ ࡋࡅࡈࡀࡕࡀ ࡅࡒࡉࡓࡉࡀࡕࡀ "Repulsed are all the curses and incantations"

Analyzing the Mandaean texts, one can find that the demonized Mesopotamian deities, which are also mentioned in the later Mandaic text corpus, prove without doubt that they were borrowed from a Late Parthian cultural setting of Central Babylonia.[119] Therefore, Mandaean incantations are essential to the study of the origin of this people. Rudolph believes that the "Mandaic incantation corpus belongs to a sunken higher religion. . . . The Mesopotamian and Iranian elements of the Mandaean texts and their placement are of major importance when it comes to the question of the Mandaeans' homeland."[120]

§ 1.8 - The Mandaean Manuscripts.

It is assumed that the first Mandaean manuscript (Diwan) was brought to Europe in 1652 by Carlo Leonelli who was known as Friar Ignatius of Jesus while he was on a mission to Basra. In 1674 François de la Croix brought to Paris the most important Mandaean manuscript, the Ginza. The French ambassador at Constantinople sent other manuscripts in 1678. More Mandaean manuscripts reached Europe successively.[121]

Many scholars studied and published Mandaean literature such as M. Thávenot (1663) and M. Norberg (1781), who exerted a considerable effort in laying the foundation of Mandaean textual study. Peterman (1867) made a translation of the Ginza based on four Paris manuscripts and published it under the name Sidra Rabba. Depending on this translation, W. Brandt (1893) published a German translation of selected passages.[122] In 1915 M. Lidzbarski published the translation of draša d̠-yahia (The Book of John), the Qolasta (liturgical collection) and the Ginza respectively.

Lidzbarski's distinguished work was continued by E. S. Drower who opened new horizons in the field of Mandaean research. She succeeded where the others failed and her achievements in this field were remarkable. Her dedication to Mandaism and her long stay in Iraq made her welcome among the Mandaean community. She traveled to Iraq many times and on several occasions visited their bit-manda (temple), in Liṭlaṭa – Qal'at Ṣaleh, Maisan province (southern Mesopotamia), and became acquainted with their traditions and customs. She won the confidence of the Mandaeans and obtained from them a complete collection of 56 Mandaean manuscripts. This collection is known as "Drower Collection" and deposited in the Bodleian Library in Oxford.[123] Lady Drower translated and published most of the collection, in addition to the Mandaic Dictionary which she compiled and published with R. Macuch in 1963.

The oldest Mandaean manuscript in Europe (Marsh. 691) is kept in the Bodleian library. It is a collection of prayers copied by the scribe Adam Zihrun, son of Bihran Šitlan in the year 1529. This codex belonged to a certain Thomas Marshal (1620 or 21- 1685), an English philologist, and was given to Bodleian in 1689 or 1690 by his servant.[124]

§ 1.9 - The Ginza Rba (The Great Treasure)

The Ginza is a big codex (more than 654 pages or 327 folios) consists of two parts: the Right Ginza (GR) and the Left Ginza (GL) each part opposite the other. The Ginza is divided into twenty-one chapters or tractates: eighteen tractates belong to the right Ginza and three tractates to the left Ginza.

§ 1 .9. 1 - The Right Ginza

The first two tractates of (GR 1 and GR 2) include moral teachings and description and praise of the King of Light and his world. The third tractate (GR 3) pp. 83– 148, [125] which is the largest in the Ginza, contains the Story of Creation (the subject of this research). The fourth tractate (GR 4) pp. 148-157 is a brief description of Manda ḏ-Hiia's baptism in the heavenly Yardina (Jordan) by Mar ḏ-Rabuta (the Lord of Greatness) plus part of Hibil-Ziwa's descent to the underworld. The fifth tractate (GR 5) pp. 157-237 consists of five sections: (1) Hibil-Ziwa's journey to the Realm of Darkness (or: the underworld). (2) The gods and demons' defeated by Manda d̲-Hiia. (3) The souls' ascension to the Maṭarata (purgatories). (4) Narration of John the Baptist baptizing Manda d̲-Hiia in the living water of Jordan. (5) The 'uthra Šalmai's questioning by the heavenly figure Yatrun.

[125] Numeration is according to the copy of the Ginza (GRS) used in this research.

The sixth tractate (GR 6), pp. 237-248, is the journey of Dinanukt[126] ("talking in accordance with religion") to the upper worlds. The Seventh tractate (GR 7) pp. 248-257 contains some of John the Baptist's commandments. The eight tractate (GR 8) pp.257-261 is a small tractate which includes Manda d̲-Hiia's warning the faithful against Rūha. Tractate nine (GR 9) pp. 261-283 includes two sections: (1) The first is called ࡒࡀࡓࡒࡀࡋࡕࡀ ࡖࡔࡅࡁࡀ ࡊࡅࡊࡁࡉࡀ qarqalta d̲-šuba kukbia "the overthrow of seven stars", a polemic chapter against other (false) religious sects. (2) The second section is 'the emanation of Mar d̲-Rabuta from the ࡍࡉࡈࡅࡐࡕࡀ niṭufta (semen?) of the heavenly Jordan'. It also contains material related to creation. Tractate ten (GR 10) pp. 283-297 is a continuation of the creation story and is called 'the Book of Radiance that radiates in the pihta'. Tractate eleven (GR 11), pp. 297-325, is called "the Book of Great Anoš" which deals with the conflict between the [126] Dinanukt is a legendary figure of the Ginza. Dinanukt is an old Persian word means "talking in accordance with religion". (MD p. 108) The legend says that din melek uthra (a heavenly being) was sent to the wise priest Dinanukt, who wanted to know about where Life is, and the nature of Kušṭa. He fell into a trance and his soul traveled with din melek, in a journey to the underworld (Siniawis) where he saw the melki (spirits) of darkness, and then to the different layers of the World of Light. There the ground was like crystal, and there was no darkness. Eventually, he returned to his body and told his people of what he saw in his journey. (For more analysis of this Ginza figure see Widengren, 1950: 62 ff. See also "How Dana Nuk Visited the Seventh Heaven" MII, Ch. IX p. 300). (Cf. "the saintly reformer", Herzfeld, Archaeological History of Iran (1935) p. 100).

World of Light and Rūha. It also mentions the faulty creation of the material world by Ptahil.

Tractate twelve (GR 12), pp. 325-341, has seven sections. The first section has the uthra Anoš as the speaker. Sections 2, 3, 4 and 5 are hymns some of which are similar to the hymns of the Canonical Prayerbook of the Mandaeans.[127] Section 6 describes the World of Darkness and its king and inhabitants. Section 7 is a kind of geography; it shows the directions of the worlds and waters. Tractate thirteen (GR 13), pp. 341-349, is called "he Prayer of the Tarmidia (Mandaean priests) to the Pious".[128] Tractate fourteen (GR 14), pp. 352-362, is called "the Book of the Great Nbaṭ" which narrates the emanation of Yawar, Yōšamin (the second Life) and many other heavenly beings. Tractate fifteen (GR 15), pp. 364-443, consists of twenty poetic sections of the Redeemer speeches and blessings. Section 15 is Ptahil lamentation and threat of waging a war. Section 16 narrates Manda d-Hiia's visit to Yōšamin and his debate with him. Tractate 16 (GR 16), pp. 446-459, consists of 11 sections, also poetic. The first section speaks of Manda d-Hiia's visit to the world of the Second Life. The rest are speeches and exhortations of the Redeemer.

Tractate seventeen (GR 17), pp. 462-469, consists of two poetic sections: the first talks about the Great First Mana and the Great Occult Eggs that existed before Mar ḏ-Rabuta (The Lord of Greatness). The second part speaks about the oppression of the Seven (planets) and the Twelve (zodiacs) against the nišmata (souls). Tractate twelve (GR 18), pp. 472-491, is a chronology of the material world. It contains information about the three catastrophes which befell the humans in three different epochs or generations.[129] and many other historical events.

[127] The hymn in section GR 12:4 is identical to CP hymn n. 214 p. 183.

[128] Buckley believes that the first 13 tractates of the Ginza testify to a fully developed Mandaean Gnosticism (Buckley, 2005: 22).

§ 1.9.2 - The Left Ginza

This part of the Ginza is divided into three sections or tractates. The first tractate (GRL I) pp. 46-89 consists of four sections. The first section tells the story of Adam and his death, and how Adam's son Šitil (Seth) volunteers to die before his father. The second section is about Adam's complaints about his death and his lamentation. The third section is about Hawa's (Eve) death. The forth is a description of different maṭaratia (watch-houses or purgatories) which the soul has to go through before her final destination.

The second tractate (GRL III) pp. 46-89 consists of twenty-eight sections of poetry. In this tractate the Great Mana speaks, beginning each section with the formula: 'I am a Mana of the Great Life.' The last tractate of the Ginza (GL 3) pp. 89-164 consists of 62 sections and deal with the nišimta (soul) and her destiny. It also includes the lamentation of the mana personifying the soul.

§ 1.10 - The Ginza used in the Research (GRS):

The copy of the Ginza (GRS) used in this work consists of 332 folios (664 pages), and each page consits of 25 lines. It was written in Iran in the late 1990s under the supervision of the Mandaean Council of Ahwaz. The headscribe of this Ginza is Rbai Ganzibra Mhatam Yuhana br Šarat (his Arabic name: Shaikh Jabar the son of Ṭawoos), who is the head-priest of the Mandaean community in Iran (he became a priest in 1948). The colophon at the end of the left part of this Ginza (GRL p. 169) tells us that this copy was written after consulting 5 other Ginzas. The scribes of these Ginzas are: Yahia Ram Zihrun the son of the Rbai Zeki Zihrun, Ram Yuhana the son of Rbai Ram, Zeki Zihrun the son of Ram Zihrun, Sam Yuhana the son of Rbai Behram and Zihrun the son of Mudalal. A copy of Petermann's Ginza was consulted, which he copied during his vistit to southern Iraq in the 1840s from 4 Ginzas, as the colophon calls them (A, B, C, D).[130] Ganzabra Ṣalaẖ Kuẖaili was at the head of the team which consisted of the following scribes and scholars: Tarmida Ṭalib Duraji, Tarmida Najaẖ Koẖaili, Yalufa Salem Kohaili, Yalufa Jamal Duraji and Yalufa Falah Kuẖaili. For the first time, in centuries, three Mandaean women participated in this work: Mudalal the daughter of Šarat and Simat and Sadia the daughters of Mahnuš.

For this research four other Ginza manuscripts from the Oriental and India Office at The British Library in London were collated to compile a critical apparatus of variants. The first manuscript is under the title: "Liber Adami Mendaice" No. Add 23,599 (henceforth BL 23599) and was presented by Sheik Yahana Chief and High Priest of the Mandaean sect with his petition to her Majesty the Queen, dated 10th December 1872, and forwarded to HM's Ambassador at Constantinople with dispatch No, 3 dated 29th Jan. 1873 from Colonel Herbert, Consul General of Baghdad. The second manuscript bears the title: "Liber Adami Mendaice" No. Add. 23,600 (henceforth: BL 23600). This Ginza is the oldest one in the British Library (bought from Mrs. Taylor in April 1860) and consisting of 315 folios and the scribe is Adam Yuhana. The third Ginza codex in the British Library is 'Liber Adami Mendaice' Add. 23,601(henceforth BL 23601) copied by Adam Yuhana, son of Sam. The third Ginza codex is 'Liber Adami Mandaice' Add. 23,601 dated 1824, also copied by Adam Yuhana, son of Sam. The forth manuscript is entitled: Sidra Rba Mandaitic, Oriental 1236 (henceforth BLO 1236).

Due to many factors, the hand written Mandaean manuscripts are in general tiresome and not easy to read, especially the manuscript (Add 23,599 = BL 23599) of the British Library. Some of these factors are:

1. Poor hand writing and careless copying led the scribes to make numerous spelling mistakes in the manuscripts.
2. These mistakes accumulated through the ages and led to many differences in readings.
3. The only method by which the scribe is allowed to edit a text is by placing dots under the wrongly written word or sentence, because the Mandaeans believe their writings are sacred and incorrect words or sentences cannot be erased or crossed.

4. The Mandaean manuscripts have no paragraph indents or punctuation marks.
5. Many words are hyphenated (especially at the end of the line) which causes confusion to the reader.
6. Ambiguities in Mandaean script often cause uncertainty and confusion in reading hand written Mandaean texts. The letters which cause such confusion are: ࡒ (ק) and ࡎ (ם); ࡓ (ר) and ࡃ (ד); ࡃ (ד) and ࡁ (ב); ࡄࡅࡍ (הון) and ࡑ (ץ); ࡀ (א) and ࡄ (ה̲); ࡒ (ק) and ࡁ (ב); ࡅ (ו), ࡐ (ף) and ࡊ (כ). The computer Mandaic font used in this work attempts to faithfully reproduce the manuscript text, but at the same time compensates for the poor handwriting and careless copying in the manuscripts.

The computerized Mandaic font reproduces original text while correcting scribal errors to a great extent. Most previous scholars were obliged to transliterate the Mandaean texts either into Hebrew or Roman characters. A notable exception, and the first scholar who used a Mandaic typeface, was the Frenchman H. Pognon, in his book 'Inscriptions Mandaïtes des Coupes de Khouabir', published in 1898. The computerized characters used in this work are similar to Pognon's. The present work also transliterates every line of the text into Hebrew characters beneath the Mandaic in order to facilitate reading for non-specialists. There are inevitable discrepancies between the present version of the Ginza and the other four versions mentioned above. The number shown on the margin of some of the pages of the translation correspond to the beginning of the page in the original text.

The translator of the Mandaic texts encounters some difficulties such as:

1. The material of the Mandaean cosmogony, cosmology, theology and soteriology is distributed among much Mandaean literature such as the ࡂࡉࡍࡆࡀ ࡓࡁࡀ Ginza Rba, ࡃࡓࡀࡔࡀ ࡖࡉࡀࡄࡉࡀ Draša d̠-Yahia (The Book of John), Mandaean Hymns and Prayers; ࡌࡀࡑࡁࡅࡕࡀ Maṣbuta, ࡌࡀࡎࡒࡉࡕࡀ Masqita, ࡏࡍࡉࡀࡍࡉࡀ 'Eniania, etc), and among the different Diwans, such as Diwan Abatur. Mandaean literature is written mostly in mystical way and many religious concepts are considered sacred explanation of which are "reserved for those considered able to understand and preserve the gnosis."[131]
2. Most of the Mandaean priests abstain (by law) from discussing profound religious matters with a Mandaean layman or a stranger. The holy scriptures strongly advise Mandaean priests against revealing these scriptures to strangers. For example the Alf Trisar Šuialia (The Thousand and Twelve Questions) commences with the following ࡆࡄࡀࡓࡀ zhara "admonition":

> In the name of the Life. Laufa (union) and revival of life and a forgiver of sins be there for me N ... by means of these good Questions, hidden from (even) the eyes of the uthras and not revealed except to such as guard them, and tell them to one in a generation each to his son. For Hibil-Ziwa placed them in his son's right hand and said, 'Take care, take care, take care,

three hundred and sixty thousand times take care of these Good Questions which Hibil-Ziwa asked of Nbaṭ the Great." [132]

The ࡍࡀࡑࡅࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ Naşoraeans (the priestly group of the Mandaeans) are keen not to reveal the mysteries of the ࡍࡀࡑࡉࡓࡅࡕࡀ Naşiruta (priestly knowledge) to their own laity, except to those elite of Mandaeans who dedicate themselves Naşiruta and have proven themselves worthy in the line of priesthood. The Naşoraeans guard their holy books and scrolls intimately. Their mysteries are not imparted to the Mandaean laymen, no matter how religious they are, fearing that these mysteries might be misinterpreted.[133]

3. The neglect which the Mandaean literature suffered from, for more than fourteen centuries, lead to many differences between the vernacular Mandaean and the Classical Naşoraean Mandaean writings.[134] Most of the Mandaean priests did not receive their priestly knowledge in religious institutes. They usually obtain their priesthood knowledge and apprenticeship from their fathers or from other elderly priests. They teach the initiates reading, writing and the comprehension of Mandaean language, in addition to the practice of the different rites (baptism, communion, marriage etc.) meticulously.[135]

The Ginza remains as the largest codex which the Mandaeans inherited from their golden era when Gnosticism flourished amongst the civilization of Babylon and Persia in the east and amongst the Greek and Roman empires in the west. In addition to the liturgies, the Ginza contains the oldest Gnostic (Mandaean) tradition. The Mandaean Gnostic library is equally as important as Nag Hammadi Codices and the Dead Sea Scrolls and they deserve more attention and examination from scholars of Semitic studies.[136]

§ 1.11 - The Mandaean Script:

The Mandaic script belongs to the South Mesopotamian branch of Aramaic besides the Syriac-Palmyrene branch in North Syria and the script of Hatra in north Mesopotamia.[137] The Mandaeans call their alphabet abgada. The twenty four letters are sacred and represent the powers of Life and Light. They believe that their inscriptions are protected by Nbu (Babylonian Nabû) "Mercury", the god of writing and wisdom.[138] Some scholars, such as Macuch, believe that there is a close relation between the Mandaic and the Elymaic scripts. Others like Nöldke and Lidzbarski suppose that Mandaic script is related to the Nabaţian.[139] The Mandaic script is known to us either from the Mandaean manuscripts or form amulets and incantations. Most of them were probably composed during the Sasanian era and the early Islamic conquest of Iraq, but the earliest known Mandaic text is a lead amulet from the first half of the third century.[140]

[139] Naveh, 1970: 33.

No one can precisely determine when the Mandaeans manufactured their script, but Naveh argues that the shapes of the letters suggest that the Mandiac cursive script is a "straightforward evolution from Elymaic."[141] Since Mesene (Maisan) and Characene were neighbours of the kingdom of Elymais, such assumption is strengthened. Many features of the Mandaic script resemble both the Nabaṭaean and the Aramaic of Tang-i Sarvak and Elymaic, such as the letters (ࡀ) alef, which is simplified from the Elymaic heart shape, (ࡌ) mem (ࡁ) bet, (ࡃ) dalet, etc., but there is no resemblance between the Mandaic(ࡔ) (š) and the Elymaic shen. [142] Macuch noted, "the most remarkable Mandaean ligatures in the Elymaean inscriptions are the relative particle (ࡖ) d̲- and the conjunction (ࡗ) kd̲ which includes it."[143]

There remains the possibility that the Naṣoreans had brought their own script when they migrated to Southern Mesopotamia, sinces many Mandaean hymns and prayers suggest such a migration. Macuch beleives that the Mandaic script had developed in the second century C.E., since there are no significant differences between the Mandaean script on the one hand and the Elymaean and Charcenian on the other.[144]

§ 1.12 - Book III of the Ginza Rba:

Book three, or the Book of Creation, is the largest tractate of the Mandaeans' holy book the 'Ginza Rba'. The Ginza names this tractate as: ࡓࡀࡆࡀ ࡅࡎࡉࡃࡓࡀ ࡒࡀࡃࡌࡀࡉࡀ ࡖࡔࡅࡕࡀ ࡄࡀࡉࡕࡀ ࡒࡀࡃࡌࡀࡉࡕࡀ ࡖࡄࡅࡀࡕ ࡌࡍ ࡋࡀࡒࡀࡃࡌࡀࡉࡀ raza u sidra qadmaia d̲-šuta haita qadmaita d̲huat mn laqadmaia 'The Mystery and the First Book of the First Living Doctrine which was from aforetime (or: from the very beginning)".[145] This tractate includes the cosmogony; the origin of the world of light and the world of darkness, the rise of the First Great Life, the Second Life (Yōšamin), the Third Life (Abatur) and the Forth Life (Ptahil); the demiurge who created the cosmos and Tibil (the earthly world). It also narrates the creation of the Mandaean redeemer Manda d̲-Haiia ('Gnosis of Life' or: 'Knowledge-of-Life') and his descent to the underworld and his triumph against the creatures of darkness. It narrates the creation of Adam and Eve and the descent of the nišimta (soul) into the 'sṭōna (the human body). Tractate III also includes an elaborate description of the demonic Rūha and her planetary sons and her attempts to seduce Adam in order to entrap him in the world.

[145] Widengren believes that the Mesopotamian back ground of heavenly books preexistent before creation and containing destinies is clear in the conception of the Book III of the Ginza (Widengren, 1950: 10, 74-75).

The "Mystery and the First Book of the First Living Doctrine" begins with folio 42r (p. 83) and ends at folio 74v (p. 148: 6) in the copy of the Ginza used in this work.[146] The language of is mostly poetic and written in classical Mandaic. The text consists of 2 prose sections and 2 poetic sections. The text begins with a prose section (pp. 83: 15 – 87: 21) followed by a prolonged poetic section (pp. 87: 21 – 119: 1). A second, but smaller, prose section is found nearly in the middle of the text (pp. 119: 1 – 120: 11) followed by another poetic section until the end of the text.

§ 1.13 - The Mandaean Story of Creation

Mesopotamia gave birth to many legends and myths such, as the epic of Gilgamesh, Enūma Eliš, Ninūrta, Ea and Inana. Out of the crucible of Mesopotamia, the land of reeds and swamps comes forth the Mandaean story of Creation. It is a unique piece of literature infused with Babylonian gods, demons and biblical motifs. With the conquest of Babylon by the Persian Empire 539 BCE,[147] and the subsequence Greek invasion of Alexander the Great in 332 BCE,[148] the Mandaean story of creation comes under the influence of Persian dualism and Greek mythology.

It addresses hiia qadmaiia the Ancient Life, the afterlife, Dualism, and cosmology. The language symbolic of Gnosticism is very poetical and is the first complete account of creation from Mesopotamia. It contains ethical and religious principles that emerged during the period when Mesopotamians demonised their gods. The Mandaean priests still recite the story of creation, on the banks of the rivers, in the same manner as their ancestors the Naşraeans used to do in the ancient times.

The Mandaean story of creation is the product of the beginning of the Gnostic era when the Mandaean world was imprinted by the dualism of ࡀࡋࡌࡀ ࡖࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ alma d̠-nhūra the World of Light and ࡀࡋࡌࡀ ࡖࡄࡔࡅࡊࡀ alma d̠-hšuka the World of Darkness. The World of Light was conceived by unknown god ࡍࡅࡊࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ nukraiia (alien); a sublime being usually referred to as ࡌࡀࡍࡀ mana (the First) Intelligence, ࡄࡉࡉࡀ hiia The Life and ࡌࡀࡋࡊࡀ ࡖࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ malka d-nhūra the King of Light. ࡀࡋࡌࡀ ࡖࡄࡔࡅࡊࡀ alma d̠-hšuka the World of Darkness is the product of the dark waters and is ruled by the King of Darkness, the leviathan 'Ur, and his mother/spouse Rūha;the goddess of the underworld. The Mandaean story of Creation narrates the doomed revolt of the vice-regent Yōšamin (the Second Life) and his sons, the uthras, Abatur (the Third Life) and Ptahil (the Forth Life and the demiurge who created the physical world), against the higher deities of the World of Light. It also describes the eternal conflict between Light and Darkness and the defeat of the World of Darkness on the hands of the valiant uthra Manda d̠-Hiia (Gnosis of Life) when he descended to the underworld and subdued the evil creatures of darkness. The prime of the Story of Creation is the creation of Adam, the First Man, by Ptahil with the assistance of Rūha and her sons ࡔࡉࡁࡉࡀࡄࡉࡉࡀ šibiahiia (the Planets), but Ptahil could not make Adam stand on his feet. A mana, a sparkle of Light, was brought form the World of Light and cast into Adam's trunk. At that moment Adam opened his eyes and stood on his feet. The beings of Light created Hawa (Eve), to be Adam's wife in order to spread ࡔࡅࡓࡁࡕࡀ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ šurbta ḏ-hiia the family of Life.

The Mandaean story of creation contains many obscure terms of creation such as pira (fruit), mana (intelligence, mind) ziwa (radiance), nhūra (light) ayar (ether), yardina (Jordan), uthras (beings of Light), hapiqia mia (streams of water), yura (a being of light, brilliance), ࡍࡉࡔࡉࡌࡕࡀ ࡅࡓࡅࡄࡀ nišimta urūha (soul and spirit) and many more. There is not one single account of the creation of the cosmos, but rather multiple accounts. In the Ginza Rba there are no less than seven accounts of the Creation, viz. in tractates 1, 2, 3, 10, 13, 15, and 18. Tractate III, however, contains the most part of the story. This work endeavors to explain such obscurities for a better understanding of the Mandaean legend of creation. Book III consists of four fractions; two written in prose and two in poetry:

1. The first fraction (GRR, pp. 83: 16 - 87: 21) begins with prose language narrating the first emanation of the Mana and the manifestation of the Life and the other principles of cosmogony, including the creation of the Mandaean messenger Manda ḏ-Hiia.
2. The second fraction (GRR, pp. 87: 21 – 119: 1) is written in poetical language. It is the longest fraction of book III and narrates: (a) The descent of the Messenger Manda ḏ-Hiia to the World of Darkness and his confrontation with the forces of the World of Darkness. (b) The creation of the material world by the Mandaean demiurge "Ptahil".

3. The third fraction (GRR, pp. 119 - 120: 11) is the shortest fraction, written in prosaic language, and speaks about the time of creation and about Ptahil's intentions concerning the creation of Adam and Eve with the assistance of the Planets.
4. The fourth fraction (GRR, pp. 120: 11 until the end of the book i.e. p. 148) narrates (a) The creation of Adam and Eve. (b) The descent of the nišimta "soul" into Adam's body (c) Rūha's attempts to seduce Adam in order to capture him in the world. (d) Manda d̠-Hiia prevents Rūha and her entourage "the Planets" from tempting Adam. (e) Description of the sects which were produced from the forces of Darkness.

§ 1.14 - The Main features of Mandaic Poetry:

Since the Mandaeans were not at all familiar with punctuation, it is hard to distinguish between the prosaic and poetic passages in the Mandaean texts. In spite of this, Lidzbarski could differentiate between the two types. He wrote a plausible introduction dedicated to the Mandaic and Aramaic poetry in his valuable book "Mandäische Liturgien".[149]

The language of the Ginza belongs to the classical period, which was not under the influence of the Arabic language.[150] This may prove that the redaction of the book was long before the Islam conquest of Iraq in the seventh century C.E. The Ginza is written mainly in poetry which "represents a fully developed Babylonian-Aramaic idiom and a poetic skill which has neither surpassed nor equaled in Mandaean literature."[151] Their geographical remoteness also made them less exposed to the Hellenistic influences.[152]

[149] Lidzbarski, Mandäische Liturgien, Berlin (1920).

[150] Macuch has divided the Mandaic literature into three historical periods: classical, postclassical and modern. The final redaction of the classical period took place in the year 272 CE according to the Mandaean copyist Zāzai d̠-Gawaztā (Macuch, 1965: LXV).

Unfortunately, this aspect of Mandaic literature remained neglected by the Semitists until Söderbergh shed the light on various Mandaic poetic forms compared to the psalms of the Coptic Psalms of Thomas. He claimed priority for the Mandaic hymns over the Coptic ones.[153] After his detailed comparison he concluded that the "Mandaic poetry, had on the whole a regular beat of 3:3, that is the line consisted of two hemistiches with three stresses in each hemistich."[154] Example:

ࡔࡀࡋࡈࡅࡊ ࡏࡋ ࡏࡅࡕࡓࡉࡀ ࡊࡀࡎࡉࡀ	שאלטוך על עותריא כאסיא
ࡖࡒࡀࡉࡌࡉࡀ ࡅࡌࡔࡀࡁࡉࡀ ࡋࡓࡅࡓࡁࡉࡀ	ד̱קאימיא ומשאביא לרורביא
ࡔࡀࡋࡈࡅࡊ ࡏࡋ ࡉࡀࡓࡃࡍࡀ ࡖࡓࡅࡓࡁࡉࡀ	שאלטוך על יארדנא ד̱רורביא
ࡅࡏࡋ ࡌࡉࡀ ࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡅࡓࡀࡅࡆࡉࡀ	ועל מיא הייא וראוזיא

He made you rule over the concealed uthras,

He made rule over the Jordan of the great (ones),

[154] Greenfield, 1989: 101.
[155] GRR, p. 89: 8

The transposition language[156] is a main feature of the Mandaic poetry; that is repeating the same verse with changing position of the words. Example:

ࡕࡓࡉࡎࡀࡓ ࡁࡅࡓࡉࡀ ࡒࡀࡁࡋࡀࡕ ࡌࡉࡍࡄ תריסאר בוריא קאבלאת מינה̱
ࡌࡉࡍࡄ ࡒࡀࡁࡋࡀࡕ ࡕࡓࡉࡎࡀࡓ ࡁࡅࡓࡉࡀ מינה̱ קאבלאת תריסאר בוריא
She conceived by him twelve beasts,
by him she conceived twelve beasts.[157]

Another interesting feature of the Mandaic poetry is the paired words. The following examples taken from book III of the Ginza: ࡉࡀࡒࡃࡉࡀ ࡅࡌࡄࡀࡁࡉࡁࡉࡀ יאקדיא ומהאביביא “burn and blaze” (89: 25), ࡆࡓࡉࡆࡀ ࡅࡌࡆࡀࡓࡆࡉࡀ זריזא ומזארזיא “the well armed and equipped” (89: 1), ࡄࡀࡎࡉࡓ ࡅࡁࡑࡉࡓ האסיר ובציר “flaw and deficiency” (88: 22), ࡄࡀࡓࡔࡉࡀ ࡅࡐࡅࡃࡓࡉࡀ הארשיא ופודריא “witchcraft and sorcery” (90: 4), ࡎࡍࡉࡀ [illegible] “repulsive and dreadful (or: ugly and appalling)” (91: 3), ࡆࡓࡉࡆࡀ ࡅࡌࡒࡀࡉࡌࡀ זריזא ומקאימא “the valiant and confirmed” (93: 7), ࡁࡄࡉࡓࡉࡀ ࡆࡉࡃࡒࡀ בהיריא זידקא “the righteous elect” (93: 11), ࡏࡓࡉࡀ ࡅࡓࡀࡅࡆࡉࡀ עריא וראוזיא “radiant and resplendent” (91:25) etc.

Greenfield draws out attention to a “favorite topos” in the Mandaean literature which concerns parts of the body and senses – eyes, ears, mouth hands, knees, feet etc.[158] The following from book III is a good example. These verses remind us of the Song of Songs:

ࡒࡅࡌࡕࡉࡊ ࡀࡓࡆࡀ ࡓࡀࡌࡀ	קומתיך ארזא ראמא

In book III we find good examples of the Naṣoraean Gnostic poetry which needs more attention. In this respect Jonas plausibly noted: "The Mandaic poetry gives wonderful expression to the gratefully believing acceptance of the message and the ensuing conversion of the heart and renewal of life."[160]

[159] GRR, 137: 21

[160] Jonas, 1958: 89. Stroumsa indicates that the Gnostic language is an imagery one and it should be studied as "mystical poetry" (Stroumsa, 1984:3).

§2 - Analysis of the Narrative

§2 - Analysis of the Narrative:

§ 2 .1 - The First Account of the Theogony:

The text begins with the following formula:

> In the name of the great ࡍࡅࡊࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ nukraiia alien Life [161] from the countless worlds of Light which is above all deeds. This is the mystery and the First Book of the First Living Doctrine which was from afore time. [162]

The main events in this account are: (a) at the beginning the pira (fruit) was inside the pira and the ayar (eather) was inside the ayar. (2) The great Mana (intelligence) "awakened" and produced great manas without count. (3) great and countless piras and škinas (celestial dwellings) emanated from the great pira. (4) by the will of the great Mana, the great white yardina (Jordan) "river" came into being and from the great Jordan countless jordans came into being.

The first account of theogony contains three main elements of creation: (a) ࡐࡉࡓࡀ Pira "fruit" (b) ࡀࡉࡀࡓ Ayar (Ether) (c) ࡌࡀࡍࡀ Mana (Mind or: Intelligence). The ࡔࡊࡉࡍࡀࡕࡀ škinas (celestial dwelling) and the ࡉࡀࡓࡃࡉࡍࡀ Yardina (Jordan) are the products of the first emanation:

[161] ࡍࡅࡊࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ nukraiia "alien" or "strange", theologically "inconceivable", "remote", "indefinable", is a constant characteristic of the "Life", the main deity in the Mandaean belief. The formula, 'In the name of the great first alien Life from the countless world of light which is above all deeds' speaks of the 'first' Life 'that is above all deeds (or: creations),' i.e., above the world and 'free from any kind of relation to the world (Rudolf, K., 1983: 62). The concept of the alien Life is one of the impressive word-symbols and a major theme which we encounter in Gnostic speech (Stroumsa, 1984: 87). The alien is that which stems from elsewhere and does not belong here (Jonas, H., 1958: 49). The Life is an outer entity ࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡁࡀࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ hiia baraiia (CP p. 78), and therefore the Mandaeans, and the Gnostics in general, saw themselves as a "kingless race" ruled by no one (Stroumsa, 1984: 87).

> When the Pira was inside the Pira, and when the Ayar was inside the Ayar, and when the great Mana of glory was there, great and mighty Manas came into being, whose radiance is so vast and whose light is great; no one before them was in the great fruit which was so immense and without limit, and whose radiance was greater than the words of the mouth and his light was bigger than what the lips can portray. As He was inside (or: in the matrix of) the Fruit, a thousand thousand fruits without limit, and countless myriads of fruits emanated from him. In each and every fruit were a thousand thousand fruits without limit, and countless myriads of škinas. They all stand there and praise the great Mana of glory who exists (lives) in the great Ether of Life that is within the Jordan (river) of the white waters which gushed out from the Great Mana. Then the great Jordan came into being, and from the great Jordan, Jordans without count poured forth. [163] (See Chart A).

§2 .1. 1 - ࡐࡉࡓࡀ Pira:

The meaning of Pira is uncertain and doubtful; of various suggested meanings, perhaps that of "Fruit" (H. פרי) or "vagina". [164] This term is used by the Mandaeans as an expression of emanation.[165] In the first version of creation we find out that the Pira (fruit) and the Ayar (ether) are the two primal elements of existence and the "habitat" in which the Great Mana (mind, intelligence) existed. In the Mandaean belief, the Pira Rba (Great Pira) is the origin of all things.[166] It existed before creation and before all worlds (aeons) and is the core matter of existence. It is the original divine power from which everything came into being, even the King of Light:

[163] GRR p. 83: 19.

[164] The second meaning for the pira is "cleft" or "vagina" as in, ࡐࡉࡓࡀ ࡅࡐࡔࡋࡀ "vagina and phallus" (MD. P., 372).

[165] The epithet Fruit used of the moon-god in Mesopotamia, of whom it is said that he is the Fruit which is born by itself, 'en-bu šá ina ra-ma-ni-šū ib-ba-nu' (Tallquist, Akkadische Götterepitheta, p. 24 cited by Widengren, 1946: 22 n. 3).

[166] Other Gnostics such as Basilides (2nd century religious teacher in Alexandria – Egypt) believe that all the universe and creations derived their being form the cosmic seed (Wilson, 1958: 124).
According to Zurvanism, the old Persian religion, Time enters a body within the seed of creation or unformed matter, from which all forms arose (Zaehner, 1955: 111 ff.).

> Before all the worlds came into being there was this great fruit. When the great fruit was inside the great fruit, the King of Light came into existence.[167]

The Great Pira is a primal entity and a symbol of fertility. It is the "womb" or the "matrix" which gave birth to the succeeding manifestations of the beings of Light, when the first Intelligence (Mana) decided to cohabit with its ࡃࡌࡅࡕࡀ dmuta "counterpart" (or with its ࡑࡀࡅࡕࡀ ṣauta "companion") in order to create ࡀࡃࡉࡀࡅࡓࡉࡀ adiauria "helpers", erect the heavenly lights and bring forth messengers of life to preserve him in his concealment, as we perceive from the following passage:

> I am conversing with my dmuta (counterpart) [168] (and say to her), Come, let us, create (lit. build), me and you, through a mystic call in the sublime fruit. Until fruits are created for us, until helpers are sent for us, you will praise me and I will praise you. We will remain preserved within the ample radiance and provide (lit. arrange) for each other perfectly . . . As he spoke thus, he thought of the ṣauta (companion)[169] that existed in the sublime fruit. He spoke and pondered, I will create ṣauta "companion" to my right and lights to > my left and I shall bring forth messengers of life to look after me in > (my) concealment.[170]

The Mandaeans believe that every man and every light-being has a double; a counterpart. Each individual has his own likeness in the ideal world of Mšunia Kušṭa (the ideal world of the Mandaeans, and inhabited by their righteous doubles. (For more details on this ideal world see MII p. 54 n. 1 and SA Ch, V p. 39z). In the Peshitta the first born "Christ" is the image ܕܡܘܬܐ of god. (Widengren, 1964: 23) The Mandaean idea of "image" is repeated in Manichaeism: Mani received his revelation through his Syzygos "Twin or: Pair-comrade". (Gardner and Lieu, 2004: 5) The ancient Mesopotamians believed in the magic powers of the image as we read that the Mitanni king Tusharatta has sent an image of Ishtar to the Pharaoh of Egypt to cure him from an intractable disease (Roux 1964: 231).

[169] ࡑࡀࡅࡕࡀ ṣauta: consort, company, companionship, society (MD p. 386).

The Pira, the celestial fruit, is the dwelling of the nišmata "souls", where they grow and blossom, as well as it is the dwelling of the Mana, Life, and the other heavenly beings:

> "nišimta (the soul) grows and blossom in the Pira of the Life."[171]

This concept is emphasized by the messenger Hibil-Ziwa's[172] proclamation that he is the one who created the white fruit of in which the nišmata (souls) are imbued:

> I created the white fruit, in which the souls are enveloped. From it > they flower up and ascend to be weighed.[173]

It is rather difficult to give a precise definition of the Pira because it is considered a ࡓࡀࡆࡀ raza mystery not revealed to any earthly being, even to prophets. John the Baptist iahia iuhana was ready to exchange his earthly life for the knowledge of the mysteries of the "world beyond" when the redeemer Manda d̲-Hiia appeared to him in the form of a young lad:

> And reveal to me the secrets of the kings (or: angels), and (the secrets

In the Ginza Rba, the Pira is personified as a heavenly being who takes part in promoting the redeemer Manda ḏ-Hiia (Gnosis of Life). It is by the great Pira of glory's command the redeemer received the kušṭa [175] from the Great Ones:

> "By the command of the Great Fruit of Glory, I (Manda ḏ-Hiia) received the kušṭa from them." [176]

Moreover, the Pira is the reward of the World of Light to the pious Mandaeans as we recite one the hymns of the masiqta (the book of masiqta Ascension):

> Thou hast spoken to us in thy Word and hast commanded us with thy command "Ask on earth and I will supply you with heavenly fruit: ask from below, (from) reed, swamp and mud, and I will supply you from the lofty heavens." [177]

[175] Kušṭa ࡊࡅࡔࡈࡀ قشطا, vow, oath, pact, etc. (MD p. 209). Kušṭa is the ritual of the exchange of the right hand-clasp between the Mandaeans which occurs during sacraments (baptism, marriage, etc.). The act is concluded by a kiss, each of the two persons kissing his own right hand when the hand is released. The Pharsis greet one another with a similar rite called the hamazor (MII p. 238). Lady Drower believes that "the Pharsis use the hamazor as much as Mandaeans use the kušṭa" (ATŠ, p. 154 n. 1). The kušṭa is personified in many Mandaean manuscripts. It is a "messenger from the Life on his way hither" (ATŠ, p. 236). The kušṭa is considered a synonym of Manda ḏ-Hiia (CP p. 44). The seal of kušṭa binds and seals the souls and spirits (Ibid p. 63). In Mandaeism, kušṭa is an element closely related to the first creation. The Kušṭa is the 'heavenly' oath which every Mandaean has to take during baptism. The Mandaeans consider the Kušṭa a communion with the World of Light. The Primal man, according to the Manicheans, was delivered from his captivity among the hosts of Darkness by the supernal entity known as the Living Spirit, who extended to him his right hand and removed him from the conflict" (Reeves, 1996: 124). (For more details concerning the Kušṭa, see Sundberg, 1953).

The sexual symbolism is quite common in the Mandaean literature as well as in the rest of the Mesopotamian literature. Mandaeism is the faith of life and fertility,[178]) and "if the man has no wife, there will no Paradise for him hereafter and no Paradise on earth."[179] The mystic union of the female and male principles is reflected in many hymns and songs. In the following marriage song, the Pira is the symbol of "virginity" or "womb":

> O crowned bride "Fruit that is enclosed! Who revealed our secret and broadcasted our wisdom to the highways? [180]

The Pira is related to other mystic elements of creation such as the tana (container, matrix), pihta (sacramental bread?), niṭufta (drop, sperm), and hilbuna (egg, container, habitat).[181] It is also identified with the [182]ࡕࡀࡍࡀ tana, which is another ambiguous other-worldly element of creation.[183]

§ 2.1.2 - ࡀࡉࡀࡓ Ayar (Ether):

[183] There are many resemblances between the Mandaean pira (fruit) and the seed in Basilides doctrine which says: "From the cosmic seed was begotten the Great Archon who created for himself a son. Then a demiurge comes into being who engendered a son from matter and reduced the world to order" (Wilson, 1958: 124-6).

heavenly atmosphere in which the Mandaean deities dwell.[184] The concept of Paradise in the Mandaean belief is different from that of the Jews, Christians and Moslems. The Mandaeans' final destination is the World of Light, a world of pure (energy) which contains no material pleasures.

When a Mandaean dies his soul is released and flies towards the ࡌࡀࡈࡀࡓࡀࡕࡉࡀ maṭaratia (purgatories or: watch-houses). After necessary purification the soul reaches her final destination; the realm of light. In the world of light there is nothing material, only jordans of living water, heavenly Ayar (Ether) which is most pure and clear and colorful flowers and evergreen plants and trees exist.[185] The soul brings Ayar with her when she descends into this world and settles in the human trunk and her (the soul) reward, after death, is to travel back to the World of Light and dwells in the sublime Ayar (Ether):

> She (the soul) rises up from one throne and seats herself on another firm throne. And (thus) by means of nine occult process (ginzia)[186] we set her up (at last) in the sublime Ayar (Ether).[187]

The Ayar (ether) preceded water in existence and in order to create the uthras and make them thrive, the Great One commanded that a "reservoir" of Living Water to be created and to flow to the (land of) Ether:

> In the Ayar (world) there is no water! As there is no water in the Ayar, by what can the 'uthras thrive? How can the 'uthras thrive and

They drank and rejoiced thereat and into their hearts Naşiruta was installed. [189]

Ayar (Ether) is the swiftest elements of Life. It is the breath of Life which dwells in every living thing and the sweet breath from the North Star:

> Just at the first dawn, there comes a sweet breath from the North Star, a pure breeze from the North. We call it Ayar-Ziwa.[190]

Just as the heavenly Jordan mixes with the earthly waters and purifies them, Ayar mixes the worldly air and purifies it. Ayar-Rba (the Great Ether), Ayar-Ziwa (the Radiant Ether) and Ayar-Sagia[191] (the Plentiful Ether) are personification of the divine and pure atmosphere which gave birth to the messenger Hibil-Ziwa and all kings.[192]

The Essenes, share the idea that pure ether is the source of life, and believe that souls emanate from the most subtle air and incorporate with man's body.[193] Ayar perhaps corresponds to the old Persian the god of the wind Vāy, that blows between heaven and earth, and who became the space separating the Kingdom of Light above and the Kingdom of Darkenss below.[194] Just like Vāy who is located between the earth and sky, Mandaean Ayar exists above the sky and beneath the earth:

(ATŠ, p. 14) In this respect Rudolph writes, "The earliest self-designations to be found in Mandaean literature are "elect of righteous" (bhiri zidqa) and "Naşoreans" (naşuraiyī), i. e. The "mana" of a human being is, so to speak, a spark of this flame, a temporarily detached part of the Great "Mana". This Gnostic conception appears in many forms of syncretistic philosophy.[199] In some features the Mandaean Mana corresponds to the Persian Vohu Mana (later form "Bahman") which means "good mind". It is the "power" which represents intelligence and wisdom.[200] He is the Lord of the Heaven who established his sovereignty through Truth.[201] In Mandaeism, "truth" ࡊࡅࡔࡈࡀ kušṭa is an element closely related to the first creation. It is the "heavenly" oath which every Mandaean has to take during baptism:[202]

> In great radiance am I immersed and in resolute light am I established. Manda baptized me; kušṭa (oath) confirmed me.[203]

As to the relation between the Mandaean Mana and the Iranian "Vohu-Mana", Lady Drower points out:

> The "mana" is the eternal part of the human soul which when freed of earthly pollution is re-united to the Great Mana. The Great Mana seems to correspond to the Zoroastrian Vohu-Mana, and represents a Cosmic Intelligence or Supersoul.[204]

In Zoroastrianism the Vohu-Manah (the good mind) is in a struggle with Aka-Manah (the evil or bad mind), and at the end Vohu-Mana will prevail.[205] In the Mandaean literature the mana represents intelligence or the mind, from which the whole of existence came into being. The only occasion where we come across evil

manas in the Mandaean literature is in the journey of the messenger Hibil-Ziwa to the underworld, where first met Rūha, and when he descended further, Hibi-Ziwa encountered the two spirits of Darkness which were called manas:

"I went (downwards) and I found those two great Manas of Darkness." [206]

The great, secret first Mana concealed himself in his škina for nine hundred and ninety nine millions (?) of years before he became manifest and initiated the existence, as we read in one of the hymns:

> I worship, laud and praise that great, secret, First Mana who dwelt for nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand myriads of years alone in his on škina – for no companion came to him; save that great, secret First Mana. For he came into existence therein and developed therein. [207]

During this endless time of the Mana's "incubation" in his škina "cocoon", the whole being was inert and the whole of existence was in oblivion. Nothing existed until the Great Mystic Mana decided to emanate from himself and with him three hundred and sixty-six mighty celestial world of light came into being and shone:

> I worship, laud and praise that Mystic First Mind (Mana) of Glory, who emanated from Himself, whose brilliance exceeds all (other) mystic glories; it is greater than word of mouth (can describe) and his light mightier than lips can express for He is the Mana (Mind), the great, the mysterious, the First of Glory, the great mighty Mana, in the radiance of which banner three hundred and sixty-six mighty celestial worlds of light shine.[208]

With the Great Mana's manifestation, existence came into motion and all the worlds gained power and the lamps and lights started to glow.[209] Lady Drower explains this move as follows:

> By the first creative impulse, when the Great Life became active and "Non-Existence" became "Existence", assumed an anthropomorphic shape.

The explanation of this is given by Naşiruta in theological rather than metaphysical language.[210] She established her statement by referring to one of the hymns:

> In the name of the great powerful Mana (Mind) who thought and evoked companionship of Itself and said, "There shall be companionship for Me". [211]

Nevertheless, the Great Mana has no share in the creation of the material world. He remains ࡍࡅࡊࡓࡀࡉࡀ nukraia an "unknown", "unperceivable". 'The alien is that which stems from elsewhere and does not belong here.'[212] The worlds and generations cannot comprehend his nature and the nature of his counterpart:

> Then he taught about the Mana (Nous or Intelligence) and its Counterpart, for the world and generations know them not – that they correspond to that which comes from the (brain) matter and the vision of the heart (inner vision) that is within them.[213]

[213] ATŠ p. 174. Plotinus, (3rd century C.E.), portrays the real lord of the universe is an unknown "otherworldly", "alien" god who dwells beyond all visible creation. The Secret Book of John describes him as "The [true] God, the Father of the All, the Holy [Spirit], the invisible,

Mandaean literature describes the Manas as pure mass of radiance and light. No one can behold their images because their radiance is blinding the eyes and their light is dazzling. When Manda ḏ-Hiia brought Hibil into the presence of the Manas, he was afraid of their immense radiance and clear light:

> He aroused, went and led him (Hibil) into the presence the Glorious Manas. When Hibil, the fore-ordained Mana, entered he was startled because their radiance was transcendent and their light was overwhelming. He was not able to behold their images because their radiance was colossal and their light was enormous.[214]

When the messenger Hibih-Ziwa returned from his journey from the World of Darkness to the World of Light, the Mana and his Counterpart ࡌࡀࡍࡀ ࡅࡃࡌࡅࡕࡀ mana udmuth̲ received him and welcomed him. In order to receive full purification he descended towards the First Jordan "of the Mana and his counterpart" and his father (Manda ḏ-Hiia) baptized him and pronounced secret ࡓࡅࡔࡌࡉࡀ rušmia (signs) over him.[215]

The following verse is one of the most beautiful verses in the Ginza which is recited at the initiation of a new priest. The Mana speaks about his dwelling in the sea until wings were formed for him. At the moment he became a winged creature, he spread his wings and flew towards the Place of Light:

> I am a great mana, a mana am I, a son of the Great Ones. I dwelt in the sea, in the sea I dwelt until wings were formed for me, until for me who is over the all, who exists in his imperishability, since he [is in] the pure light into which no eye may look" (Rudolph, 1983: 61, 62 and 63). Lady Drower in her argument against those who claim that neo-Platonism influenced Naşoraean gnosis directly or indirectly raises the following question: "As for the possibility that neo-Platonism influenced Naşoraean gnosis directly, and 'directly' should be stressed, why the Naşoraeans adopted the word Mana for the Creative Mind instead of the Greek νοῦς (Nous)?" (SA p. 46) She emphasizes that "The word used for "Mind", mana is not in the sense Semitic but Iranian" (SA p. 2).

> wings were formed, until I became a winged creature. When I became a winged creature I spread my wings for the Place of Light.[216]

The above verse reminds us of the Ōannēs[217] legend which was written in Greek by the Babylonian priest Berossus. He described Ōannēs as having the body of a fish but underneath the figure of a man which dwelt in the Persian Gulf. He rose out of the waters in the daytime furnishing mankind with instruction in writing, the arts and the various sciences. Mead believes that Ōannēs' revelation is fundamental among the Mandaeans and it might be related to the Redeemer of the world, the Celestial Man who is expected to rise from the heart of the ocean, as it is written in the Apocalypse of Ezra.[218]

> The Mana is the crystal crown which crowns the head of the Great (Life):
> The Mana spoke to the generations: "I am a crystal crown. A crystal crown I am, which crowns the head of the Great (Life)." [219]

In addition to Mana, the heavenly being, there is the mana in the sense of ࡍࡉࡔࡉࡌࡕࡀ nišimta soul; the hidden sparkle of light. When Ptahil created Adam he could not make him stand on his feet. He, therefore, had to fetch a hidden mana (soul) from the House of Life and cast it into the bodies of Adam and his wife Eve.[220] This being of light mana (soul) had to sojourn in the ࡔࡐࡉࡍࡆࡀ špinza "inn" (the human body) against its will.[221] Because of this imprisonment (in the stinking body of man), the mana (soul) laments and complains:

[217] Ōannēs – Greek form of Uan, a name given to Adapa by Berossus. "Adapa was the first of the antediluvian seven sages who were sent by Ea, the wise god of Eridu to bring the arts of civilization to mankind" (Dalley 2000: 183).

[218] Mead's comment in this concern is notable; he writes: "Indeed the Fisher-figure cannot fail at once to remind students of the comparative science of religion of the ancient Babylon fish-clad fisher-god H̱ani-Ōannēs – the archaic Ea, father of Marduk the saviour god of Babylon who rose early from the dead." (See also Brandt, 1889: 148 ff.) This primeval God of Wisdom was the culture-god who had taught early mankind all the arts of civilization. Berossus, the Chaldaean priest (281 B.C.E.) who wrote Babyloniaca in Greek for Antiochus I, tells us of no less than six manifestations of Ōannēs in successive periods; and this notion of revelation and saving in successive periods is fundamental with the Mandaeans. Ōannēs rose from the sea – the waters presumably of the Persian Gulf, in the old story; but Marduk, his son descended from heaven (Mead, 1924: 17, see also Pallis, 1926: 47).

The lamentation of the mana (soul) is the main theme of GRL book 2, and bears the characteristics of the lamentations of ancient Mesopotamia:

> "I am a Mana of the great Life I am a Mana of the mighty Life. Who has made me live in the Tibil, who has thrown me into the body's trunk?" [223]
> "For a long time I have endured and been dwelling in the world" [224]
> "A Mana am I of the great Life. Who has thrown me into the suffering of the worlds, who has transported me to the evil darkness?" [225]

On the other hand, it is through the sacrifice of the mana or the nišmta (the soul) the World of Light could defeat the World of Darkness:

> O, nišimta soul rise and go and enter inside the body and be a prisoner inside the Palace. The rebellious Lion will be captured by you, the grim furious Lion. The Dragon will be captured by you, and killed in on the spot. The King of Darkness, whose strength no one can match, shall be fettered by you.[226]

The Aramaic etymology of mana is: "vessel", "utensil", "garment" "clothing", and "instrument". [227] The Mandaean priests give four meanings for the word mana. (a) the soul, (b) a dove, (c) a garment, (d) a house.[228] The Mana is the instrument in which the Mana and his companion hid themselves in order to create the new generation of Life. It appears in plural forms in the following text:

> I bowed to and prostrated myself to my companion, and I received from her the precious kušṭa. We entered the mania (instrument) and concealed our selves. And she agreed to be my consort.[229]

The second occurrence of mana in the plural form mania is the Mandaean ceremony Ahaba ḏ-Mania (the presentation of garments [a form of zidaq brika] for those who have died not wearing the ritual garment - rasta).[230]

In ATŠ we read that the Mana is the Great Radiance, the translucent heavenly teacher who teaches the Naṣoraeans the sacramental rites (treasures). The messenger Hibil-Ziwa appeals to the Great Mana, the Lord of all worlds, to explain to him the perfect rites, as without them no healing (asuta) of baptism in the Jordan will be bestowed on the Naṣoraeans and their robes will be debased and their crowns will fall from their heads.[231]

§ 2.1.4 - ࡉࡀࡓࡃࡉࡍࡀ yardina (Jordan):

Ritual immersion of the Mandaeans requires running or flowing water "rivers" which fits with the aquatic and marshy environment of southern Mesopotamia. The Mandaeans call all rivers and streams "jordans", and the Jordan, in their belief, is a terrestrial river "descended from the celestial world by way of the mountains." [232] The Jordan of the pure (white) waters originates from the Great Mana who dwells in Great Ether of Life.[233] The heavenly Jordan is not only the link between the World of Light and the physical world, but also functions as the conduit which pours from the World of Light in order to purify mia siauia, the black lifeless waters of the earth.[234] The black waters encircled the circumference of the world remained turbid,[235] until the Great Life ordered the Savior Manda d̲-Hiia to draw a channel of Living water and let fall into the black waters:

> Arise, you, and depart towards the watersheds. And draw a tiny channel

Without the "Living Water" of the Yardina (Jordan) purifying the Mandaeans, their nišmata 'souls' would remain confined to this world; the World of Darkness, and could never return to the World of Light.[237] The Jordan cleans all faults and the trespasses and is the father of all worlds, celestial, central and lower: it is a medicine transcending all means of healing.[238] The healing powers of "the great Jordan of the First Life, which is all healings" [239] correspond to the magical healing powers of the Jordan, which healed Namaan, the captain of the host of the king of Syria from his leprosy, stated in the Old Testament.[240]

Without the baptism (immersion) in Jordan (running water) one cannot receive the pure sign and therefore he cannot be a Mandaean:

Mandaean maṣbuta (baptism) in the yardina ḏ-mia hiia 'the Jordan of Living Water' is the unification with the World of Light. According to the Mandaeans, the baptism which takes place in the earthly world is a replica of the heavenly baptism carried out by the beings of Light. It was performed to purify Hibil-Ziwa in the heavenly yardina (Jordan) from the pollution with which he was polluted during his journey to the underworld. [242]

Baptism protects the Mandaean against evil and seals him physically and spiritually by the seal of Life: "These souls who are descending to the Jordan will be sealed by the seal of the seal of the Mighty Sublime Life." [243] The running water is not only for healing the body and purifying the souls, but also "the symbol of the fertilizing male principle" in the Mandaean literature, e.g. Earth is "the Mother" and Rain or River "the Father".[244]

> For Jordan is a baba (father) and the Earth a mother whose name is (mamma) [245]

Stroumsa writes: "Gnostic water imagery made use of biblical themes: 'The water of the Jordan is the desire for sexual intercourse' [Testim. Truth 31:1-3]."[246] This phrase is quite compatible with the Mandaean imagery, where the Mandaean literature credits the origin of the sexual desire to the Living Water and to the messenger Hibil-Ziwa:

The Iraqis believed, from the ancient times, in the seals of the great names to protect them from evil. The most famous is the Seal of King Solomon which contains the magic names that gave him the power over the djinn, birds and wind (See Dawkins J., "The Seal of Solomon", Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society (1943) pp. 145-150 esp. p. 145.).

> I went towards two legally joined persons. I came and opened living waters and gave to the pair of this world to drink. I opened living water and gave of them to the bridal pair of this world to drink. I sowed in them pregnancy and birth and with sexual desire I enflamed them and caused love to dwell in both of them.[247]

It is interesting to note that Marcionites (a heretical sect founded in C.E. 144 at Rome by Marcion) had launched a surprising attack upon John and the baptism in the Jordan and called him: "Archon of the multitude":

> "The river of Jordan, this, to him, is the strength of the body – that is, the essence of pleasure; and the water of Jordan is the desire for carnal co-habitation." As for John, he is "the archon of the multitude" [248]

According to the Mandaean manuscript ࡄࡀࡓࡀࡍ ࡂࡀࡅࡀࡉࡕࡀ haran gawaita 'Inner Haran', John the Baptist (iahiah yuhana) was born when his old barren mother ࡏࡍࡉࡔࡁࡀࡉ 'enišbai 'Elizabeth' became pregnant with him when she drank a sip from the Jordan. As a result the seed of John was sown in her womb:

> ". . . in Tamar [249], the pure Jordan, and bore witness to the Truth.
> And in the great Jordan a pure seed was formed . . . and came and was [248] Doresse, 1960: 220. In this concern Jonas writes: "This is entirely unique. Could it be a retort to the Mandaeans – the other side of the bitter quarrel of which we have the Mandean side in their writings? The account is too sketchy to permit more than the suggestion of this tempting possibility" (Jonas, H., JR, 1962: 265).

[illegible]

> sown in the womb of 'Nišbai, so that from it a child might come into being, a prophet of the great Father of Glory." [250]

It seems that the Mandaeans follow the Sumerians, who did not always differentiate between "'semen" and "water"; the same word can stand for both. It is Enki who fecundates and produces productivity: "O Father Enki, go forth out of the seeded country, and may it sprout good seed!"[251] To the above Sumerian concept of fertility we find striking parallels in Mandaean literature:

> For Earth called Jordan (living water) "My father" when its mysteries fell into her. And she cried aloud to Jordan "Do not penetrate me" and said to it "Answer me, my father, answer me" and "Raise me up, (O) great Son of the Great One, father of a son of Life! Answer me, Šilmai and Nidbai, lords of the Jordan". [252]

The Mandaeans consider the Living Water, which originates in the world of Light, is the Life itself which flows from the House of Life in which Mandaeans lustrate their bodies and souls:

> In the name of the Life! Water of Life art thou! Thou art come from the Place which is life-giving and art poured forth form the House of Life. (At thy) coming, Water-of-Life, from the House of Life, the good come and refresh themselves, (but) the wicked are discomfited and the children of (this) world abashed.[253]

Albright finds in the above Mandaean hymn a striking resemblance to the Assyrian egubbû incantations: "In the name of life! Ye are the living waters, which have come from a wide place, Lady Drower states, 'Today the word yardina (Jordan) is applied not only to running water used in baptism and immersion, but to any flowing stream; yet the conjunction of John the Baptist and the Jordan is significant. [254]

§2.1.5 - ࡔࡊࡉࡍࡀ Škina (celestial dwelling):

ࡔࡊࡉࡍࡀࡕࡀ škinata has its usual ambiguity as the other Gnostic Mandaean terms. In creation it is meant to be the celestial dwelling, but it is also used as the cult-hut in which the Mandaean rites take place. The škinata or 'ndruna is a booth built of reeds and intertwined with myrtle and roses.[255] It is where the priest sits and from which he performs his duties like the marriage ceremony. The worldly škina used in the rituals is a reproduction of the škina of the World of Light. It is through the škina that Mandaeans can experience the Divine Godhead.

The ࡔࡊࡉࡍࡀࡕࡀ škinata (celestial dwellings)[256] are the product of the first emanation and they became the celestial abode of the Mandaean deities; "the Life", the Mana and their uthras. The škina was founded by the Life above the tanna in the great Jordan "Piriawis":

> Piriawis, the great Jordan of the First Life, which all healings is afire > like the glory flaming in the ࡕࡀࡍࡀ tanna (matrix?). When Life was [254] SA p. xiv.

[255] For the details of the construction of the škinta by the Mandaean priests see MII pp. 152-3.

[256] Cf. שכינה The biblical Hebrew word for Tabernacle miščan, is used in the sense of dwelling-place in OT, Psalm 132:5 "Before I find a place for God, mishcanot (dwelling-places) for the Strong One of Israel" (עד אמצא מקום ליהוה משכנות לאביר יעקב). In Talmudic literature, the Shekhinah is God himself (Sholem G., 1962: 163). Quispel believes that there is a close connection between the Shekhinah in Jewish Mysticism and the Mandaean concept of Adam Qadamaia "the primordial Man" (Quispel G., "Ezekiel 1: 26 in Jewish Mysticism and Gnosis", Vigiliae Christianae, Vol. 34, No. 1, (Mar. 1980), pp. 1- 13, esp. p. 3).

> ardent and life burst forth in the great glory which flamed therein,
> Life arose and founded its škina above the tanna.[257]

Enormous and countless myriads of škinas came forth from the fusion of the Great Mana with the Pira.[258] The škinas, with their illuminating light and magnificent radiance, are the symbol of the Divine might and glory:

> Then the Lord of Greatness Mara-ḏ-Rabuta stood and created four hundred and forty four škinas to his right, and three hundred and sixty škinas to his left. Then, he created from every škina one thousand and eight hundred thousand myriad ruban precious and sublime uthras. Their radiance is magnificent and their light is illuminating. Their precious illumination lights up the Lamps that shine before them. Two guards are posted upon every single škina and two lamps are lit in front of them.[259]

The škina, just like the other Mandaean elements of creation, is enclosed with mystery which no one can comprehend its entity:

> He is the Kušṭa (Truth) who lives in upper heights, the Lord of Greatness, Lord of all mighty beings.[260] There is no one to define and express his force and all his worlds and his škinas, in which the uthras and melki "kings" dwell.[261]

The celestial Škinas developed from the First Mystic Škina:

> Praised is that great mystic škina and praised the three hundred and sixty škinas which proceeded from that first great mystic škina.[262]

From these mystical dwellings (or: sanctuaries) of the high beings, mystic sprouts came into being:

> The proven, pure one spoke saying to the Great One: "If it pleases you, Great One, if it pleases you Great Ones, a world of light has been made Created is a world of light and a company has been established therein, Škinas have been set up therein. Mystic sprouts (offspring) will come into being and at your word they will flourish, they will flourish at your word and sprouts that are worthy will be raised up."[263]

In another hymn, the Škina appears to be the "divine abode" in which the Great Mana "cocooned" himself before revealing himself to the worlds. The idea appears to be that the Great Mana has its period of quiescence, ceasing to be. [264] He became manifest only when He was fully developed in his Škina:

> I worship, laud and praise that great, secret, First Mana who abode for nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand myriads of years alone in his own Škina – for no Companion came to him; (none existed) save

The škinta which is constructed by the Mandaean priests in the Bit Manda (The House of Mandaeans or: Mandaean Temple) is the reflection of the heavenly škina in which all beings of Light dwell. In the process of consecration of a ašualia (a Mandaean novice for priesthood), has to enter a newly-built ࡔࡊࡉࡍࡕࡀ škinta (a cult hut), and the ࡏࡍࡃࡓࡅࡍࡀ 'ndruna (booth constructed for ritual purposes such as marriage and initiation) which symbolizes his former lay status is pulled down. The earthly škinta, with the Mandaean priests sitting in it practicing their rituals, symbolizes a particular realm within the divine world. It is the Mandaean sacred and pure dwelling, in the earth Tibil, which belongs to the World of Light:

> Praised be that great occult First škinta (abode) because it is Mine. Praised be the three hundred and sixty škinata (abodes), the three hundred and sixty worlds, ours, because they are worlds of light amongst which all mysteries are shared out – they emanated from the supreme and Celestial World.[266]

The škinata are the celestial dwellings for the countless battalions of 'uthras; the "warriors" of the realm of Light. These škinata are hidden from men in the World of Light.[267]

> Praised be all the mighty and lofty world of light; praised be all those škinata "sanctuaries" of the Hidden for in each and every škinta sit a thousand thousand 'uthras, ('uthras) without end, and the myriad myriad sanctuaries that are countless. Praised are those thousand thousand 'uthras without end and the myriad myriad sanctuaries beyond count.[268]

The earthly škinta is an oblong and with a pent-roof reed hut plastered with washed clay. When the škinta is constructed (always constructed nearby a stream of running water), seven priests are gathered together and recite the devotion prayers (rahmia). During this ceremony, the holy books are set in and the banners are unfurled.[269] The škinta is purified every year at the festival of the five days of creation (Paruaniia).[270] After its purification and consecration only priests are allowed to enter.[271] "In the škinta the ašualia (novice for priesthood) lives for seven days and nights, leaving it only to relieve himself." In respect to the large numbers of celestial being and dwellings Scholem writes: "This pluralistic generalization, which of course no longer permits the equation of the Shekhinah with the supreme God, appears to have been self-evident among the Mandaeans, whose literature overflows with references to myriads of worlds, uthras (treasure houses of riches) and shekhinoth, though we never learn precisely what it is they represent" (Scholem (1962), English translation 1987: 164).

škinta!" And those crowns which thou intendest to distribute amongst the priests of the škinta shall be (held) in they hand.[273]

In the škinta, the šualia (novice) receives his mystic knowledge from his Rba (teacher). During these seven days and seven nights of the novice's solitude in the škinta, he and his master, observe the strictest rules of purity. The main purpose of the earthly škinta is the consecration of a new priest and performing the masiqta (ascension) rituals. Lady Drower believes that Mandaean škinta is related to 'the sanctuary of a Nestorian church,'[274] while, in the Talmudic conception, the Shekhinah represents God's dwelling and glory in the created world.[275]

§ 2. 2. - The Second Account of the Theogony

§ 2. 2 - The Second Account of the Theogony:

In the second account of theogonay (GRR book III p. 84: 14 ff) In addition to the previous Gnostic terms, mentioned in the first version of creation, we come across new terms in the second version; yura (radiance), hiia tiniania (the Second life) and hapiqia mia (the streams of water). Some of these terms are peculiar and difficult to understand and Yura is one of them. The main events in this account are: (a) The creation of the yardina rba "Great Jordan" (b) The Life is born from the great Jordan (c) The Life addresses Itself (or: Himself) with a request and begets the Second Life (d) The Second Life calls forth uthras and sets up škinas and creates his own Jordan (e) Three uthras come into being and address a request to the Second Life to grant them permission to raise škinas for themselves. What the three uthras requested from the Second Life was granted to them:

> When the fruit was still in the fruit, when the Ayar (ether) was still in the Ayar, and when the great ࡉࡅࡓࡀ Yura (Radiance), whose ࡆࡉࡅࡀ ziwa radiance and ࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ nhūra light are so vast and extensive, before which no one existed, and from which the great Jordan of living water came into being. The water flowed to the earth of ether on which the Life sat, and the Life presented himself in the likeness of the great Mana, from which he came into being, and the Life addressed himself with a request. By the first request an eternal uthra came into being, whom the Life called ࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡕࡉࡍࡉࡀࡍࡉࡀ hiia tiniania 'the Second Life'. Countless and endless ࡏࡅࡕࡓࡉࡀ uthras also came into being. From the Life a Jordan ࡉࡀࡓࡃࡉࡍࡀ yardina came into being, which like the first Jordan flowed into the earth of light, and the Second Life stood (or: baptized) in it. And that Second Life called forth uthras and set up ࡔࡊࡉࡍࡀࡕࡀ škinas and called forth a Jordan, in which the uthras were set up (or was baptized).

> Three uthras came into being, who addressed a request to the Second Life; they were then allowed to produce škinas for themselves. What the three uthras requested from the Second Life was granted to them. They consulted together and produced škinas. They petitioned and spoke to their father; they asked their father and said to him: "Are you the one who created this Jordan of living water, which is so marvelous and whose aroma is so fragrant, and the uthras which were established (or: baptized) in it and which are so great, and are they your uthras which were established (or: baptized) in it?" The Second Life replied, speaking to the three uthras: "As for me, your father, the Life created me, and the Jordan belongs to the Life, and you are brought into being by the power of the Life.' Then they spoke to him: 'Give us of your radiance and your light and of that which surrounds you and we shall depart and go below the streams of water ࡄࡀࡐࡉࡒࡉࡀ ࡌࡉࡀ hapiqia mia, call forth škinas for you, establish a world for you, and may the world belong to us and to you." (Chart II)

§ 2. 2. 1 - ࡉࡅࡓࡀ Yura:

Yura is one of the beings of Light in the Mandaean theogony, but the Mandaean writings do not provide us with sufficient account of him. The Mandaic Dictionary defines him as: Iur, iura (< יוהרא) light, brilliance, being of light.[276] He is a spirit of light and, the treasurer who lives with his ࡃࡌࡅࡕࡀ dmuta (counterpart) in their škina. Yura or Yur describes himself:

> I am Yur son of thou-art-bright". [277] "I am Yur son of Barit (I shone forth). In great effulgence the radiance glowed (with heat?). The tanna (vapour or: matrix) dissolved and a škinta came into being, a škinta came into existence and was established in the House of Life.[278]

[278] CP p. 9 Hymn n. 12 (Mş no. 12 p. 48). The text:

Due to the paucity of Mandaean writings concerning Yura Rba, we can not determine his real purpose. The Ginza describes him as ࡂࡀࡍࡆࡉࡁࡓࡀ ganzibra. Ganzibra bears dual definitions: a 'Treasurer' and also the title for a Mandaean (bishop) which the ecclesiastical rank above that of tarmida (priest):

> Instruct them concerning Sidar-Kasia-Anana
> inside which the Treasurer, Yur Rba, is concealed.[279]

The following warning which is written in the Ginza and directed to perverse Naşoraeans (Mandaeans) confirms the role of yura as a treasurer:

> The secret treasure will be taken away from them (from the impious Naşoreans) and will be handed over to Yura Rba, the treasurer. He (the impious Naşorean) will be removed from Light and will burn in the lower hell.[280]

The Ginza also tells us that yura rba, like the other spirits of light, has a dmuta (counterpart) who lives with him:

> They provided him with hidden words, so sublime and transcendent to the world. They instructed him concerning Yura Rba and his magnificent dmuta (counterpart) who (cohabits) with him.[281]

In one of the prayers, Yur Rba is invoked as a redeemer. Here he is described not only as the ganzibra (treasurer) but also as "king of worlds of light":

Other Mandaean writings call him mystic. In the following hymn yura is classified with šalmai and nadbai, the great guardians of the Mandaeans' sacred rivers:

> You will behold the great mystic Yura whom they planted. You will see Šalmai and Nidbai dwelling in a great cloud of light. In that cloud they dwell and put in charge of all jordans. [283]

Finally Lady Drower states, "As Yura is unusual as a form of Yur it is tempting to consider יורה "the first rain", "spring, "early season". [284]

§ 2. 2. 2 - ࡄࡉࡉࡀ hiia The Life:

The Life is the supreme deity in the Mandaean belief. He is usually described as nukraiia "alien", "remote", "ineffable" since nobody has ever seen His brilliance and glory ࡃࡏࡍࡉࡔ ࡋࡃࡌࡅࡕࡄ ࡋࡀࡄࡆࡄ ࡋࡆࡉࡅࡄ ࡅࡏࡒࡀࡓࡄ d-'niš ldmuth lahzh lziuh u'qarh [285]. "The Great Life is a personification of the creative and sustaining force of the universe, but the personification is slight, and spoken of always in the impersonal plural, it remains mystery and abstraction. The symbol of Life is the "living water" yardina "Jordan." [289]

The World of Light came into existence through a series of emanations form the First Life.[290] As soon as the First Life ࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡒࡀࡃࡌࡀࡉࡉࡀ hiia qadmaiia arose from his škina he created three hundred and sixty Jordans and appointed two guards upon each of them . . . then he created three hundred and sixty worlds of Light. another fragment of the Ginza we read that the First Life declared to the great supreme Mana that he thought carefully and created a son. The Mana asked the Life to clothe the son with the attire of radiance and to cover his head with turban of light:

> The First Life bowed in worship and praised that great supreme Mana and said to him, "I thought and created one son; the unique great righteous one, who came to being from the unique great righteous one." He (the great supreme Mana) said to Him (to the First Life), "Go, dress him with the attire of radiance and cover his (head) with the good pure turban of light." [293]

The "First Life" is the main Mandaean revealed deity who is entitled of worship.[294] He participates in the positive aspect alone: it is nukraiia "beyond", alauia kulhun ubadia "above all creation", balma dnhūra "in the world of light".[295] In baptism every Mandaean must receive the Pure Sign ࡓࡅࡔࡌࡀ ࡃࡀࡊࡉࡀ rušma dakia; the Sign of Life ࡓࡅࡔࡌࡀ ࡃࡄࡉࡉࡀ rušma d-hiia. The Mandaean adaptation of Life as their main deity is derived from their own habitat in southern Iraq. The quest for life is a major theme in the Epic of Gilgamesh and of Mesopotamian incantations.[299] The ritual customs of the Mandaeans, as well as in the ancient Mesopotamian religion, are influenced by the idea of 'life' and how to reach the House of Life in order to gain eternal life.[300] called the Second Life, also uthras without limit or count came into being.[304]

The Second Life played the most important role in the creation of the semi-physical world (the world which is located beneath the World of Light). As soon as he came into existence, the Second Life became obsessed with the thought of creation[305]. He incurred the great schism in the World of Light when he allowed the three uthras (his sons, especially Abatur) to go down below ࡄࡀࡐࡉࡒࡉࡀ ࡌࡉࡀ hapiqia mia the "streams of water" (the waters that separate the world of light from the world of darkness) and create their own world and ignore the name of the Life.[306]

The Second Life's creation of a new world was considered by the World of Light as an evil act of rebellion which "instigated the Great Controversy, never to be resolved in all eternity"[307]. Yōšamin "revealed the secret of the Great Ones" and threw controversy into the Light.[308]. The Mandaean faith dictates that the world (which was created by Yōšamin) is the source of all evils and all errors and deficiency is the product of a "divine tragedy" caused by Yōšamin.[309] Some Mandaean writings recount that all error and deficiency originated when Yōšamin came into existence and it is he who caused the 'discord' in the World of Light.[310] For his insolence, the Second Life was cast down from his throne and was bound with a chain in order to stay eternally in it:

Then the Evil gained understanding, and rose to make war upon the Father of Greatness. The Father of Greatness pronounced a word, from which were borne seven powers. But seven demons set themselves up against the Lord God and against the Powers he had engendered: after having shackled these adversaries, they stole from the Father of Greatness the principle of the soul (Doresse, 1960: 60).

> "Yōšamin was cast down because he wanted to instigate a fight and throw controversy into the House of the Great Ones. He imagined evil; therefore he was bound with a chain in order to stay eternally in it."[311]

In draša d-yahia (the Book of John or the Book of Kings) we read that a great 'angelic' war took place in the World of Light between the forces of the Life on the one hand and Yōšamin and his allies on the other. Yōšamin lost the war; his sons were killed in the resistance, and his wives went around in mourning. His yardinia (Jordans) were disturbed and his škinas were removed out of their place. They destroyed his dwellings and his buildings, and his throne was placed at the gates of Supat (underworld).[312]

After the tragedy Yōšamin came back to his senses; he repented and asked to be baptized and the name of the Life to be placed upon him:

> "I want acknowledge by your baptism and your name to be expressed and placed upon me."[313]

The Great Life was pleased with this result and restored Yōšamin's status. The World of Light promised Yōšamin to restore his škinas and buildings and to bring back his sons to him alive and to appoint messengers and guards in his domain. His throne to be erected firmly and he is to be called the King of the Škina:

Your children are to be brought back to you alive and you are to be served by your messengers as guards in your realm. Your throne is to be erected firmly, as it was, and you are to be called a king in your škina". [314]

On the other hand, the Second Life "Yōšamin" is considered by the Mandaeans as the "archetype of a priest careless in rituals".[315] Yōšamin is the neglectful priest in the World of Light.[316] ATŠ directs a clear warning to the priest who does not perform the rite perfectly: "Nevertheless, exhort him (the priest) and warn him against performing rites as Yōšamin performed them." [317] In this connection Deutsch writes:

> The interplay between human and angelic priests also plays an important role in the Mandaean rehabilitation of fallen uthras such as Yōšamin, Abatur and Ptahil. According to Kurt Rudolph, at a certain point in the history of the Mandaean religion, the priestly class empowered itself and transformed what was originally a radically dualist theology into a more monistic, ritualistic system in which human priests played a greater role. An important part of this social > and theological transformation was the rehabilitation of fallen, cosmic priests such as Abatur, who were re-created in the image of the newly empowered human priests. [318]

Yōšamin and his sons Abatur and Ptahil resemble, in a way, the sinning angels of I Enoch 6-11.[319] Deutsch explains:

> The connection between the Mandaean uthras and the fallen angels is primarily, but not solely, based on their common fall from grace following an act of rebellion. Another important but less obvious parallel between the two sets of figures in that both are related to the image of a polluted priesthood. We have already seen that Yōšamin, Abatur, and Ptahil were characterized as heavenly priests who corrupted themselves by rebelling against the Great Life. [320]

In Mandaean prayer Yōšamin is the strength which guides the waters to the sea. [321] He is also mentioned in marriage songs as a light-spirit of abundance and fertility.[322] The First Life is anterior to the Second Life by six thousand myriad years and the Second Life is anterior to the Third Life by six thousand myriad years and the Third Life more ancient than any uthra by six thousand myriad years. [323] He is the pure one who abides on treasures of the waters and upon mighty celestial wellsprings of light. [324]

In some Mandaean writings Yōšamin is called the peacock:

Yōšamin was pardoned by the Life and was re-enthroned in the World of Light. He is mentioned in the prayers of forgiveness: 'For our forefathers there shall be forgiveness. For Yōšamin son of Dmut-Hiia there shall be forgiveness of sins.[327]

ࡄࡀࡐࡉࡒࡉࡀ ࡌࡉࡀ hapiqia mia, form the water frontier of the world of Light. This is the name given to the river of departure, which the souls have to cross in the ships: mṭit hap'qia mia hu ṣurik ziwa alapania uhpiqia mia abran "When I (the soul) reached the streams (or: springs) of water, ࡑࡅࡓࡉࡊ ࡆࡉࡅࡀ surik ziwa (the Burst of Radiance) came to meet me and led me across the streams (or: brooks) of water."[328] These ships, which transport the souls of the righteous across hapiqia mia, are illustrated in the drawings of the Mandaean scroll Diwan Abatur.[329] The steams (or: springs) or water hapiqia mia are of fresh water and flow from the realm of Yōšamin (the Second Life), the Middle World. The Sumerian and Babylonians likewise, considered the Apsū to be the underworld ocean of sweet water, from which all springs of fresh water flow.[330] We find some resemblances between hapiqia mia and the Khinvat Bridge over the abyss which the Persian soul has to cross in order to reach Mount Harā (Paradise).[331] The god Zurvān controls the path which the souls of the dead, good and bad, must traverse before they come to Khinvat Bridge.[332] Like surik ziwa (mentioned above), the good Vāy takes the souls of the blessed by hand and brings them to their appointed place.[333] On the other hand, perhaps the Mandaean hapiqia mia has a linguistic analogy to the biblical terms אפקי ים afiqe yam (channels of the sea)[334] and אפקי מים afiqe mayim (channels of water).[335]

[329] The astral ships drawn in the Mandaean scrolls resemble, with no doubt, the ancient round boats of Iraq قفة (quffa) still used in some parts of the rivers of Mesopotamia. The image of the boatman taking one to the other world is a major theme of the Gilgamesh Epic (see Dalley, 1989: 104-105).

According to the Mandaeans' tradition, the world of hapiqia mia (outflowing water) is located above the world of Abatur (the Third Life) and below the world of pure Yōšamin.[336]. When the soul departs the dead body it flies over the great white mountain Sur towards the maṭarta (purgatory). Its journey takes forty-five days during which the soul goes into the process of purification. Then Abatur weighs the soul and allow it to proceed towards the hapiqia mia, the frontier of the world of light which the soul has to traverse in order to reach the worlds of light. The water functions as a last barrier before the soul reaches her final destination, the World of Light. The masiqta (ritual of the dead) helps the ࡍࡉࡔࡉࡌࡕࡀ nišimta (soul) to cross these waters:

In other writings, it is Hibil-Ziwa who saves the souls from 'Ur, the king of darkness, by pulling them out from his mouth and throw them in the Ocean of Sup to remove their sins and then leads them across and delivers them to the uthra who is in charge of the hapiqia mia:

> He takes them out from the mouth of 'Ur and throws them into the large sea of Sup, until their sins are completed. Then these souls, like white sesame thrown into living water, are then baptized with a great ࡌࡀࡑࡁࡅࡕࡀ maṣbuta (baptism), with a great baptism which baptize them and instructs them with great teachings. Then he leads them across the water streams hapiqia mia. The uthra of the water streams hapiqia mia approaches the souls, which were in affliction, and tears appear together in their eyes. He speaks to them, "You have dwelt in Tibil (the earthly world), in the dwelling of the sinner". Afterward he takes every individual by his right hand and seats him in great glory.[338]

It is worthy to note that whereas Lidzbarski translated hapiqia mia, "Wasserbächen" [339], Lady Drower stated, "I find it better to translate by a paraphrase which conveys the real meaning, hence "waters of death".[340] The Mandaeans consider

Abatur is Bhaq-Ziwa[343], the father of the uthras ࡀࡁ ࡖࡏࡅࡕࡓࡉࡀ ab d-uthria who by gazing into the ࡌࡉࡀ ࡎࡉࡀࡅࡉࡀ mia siauia (the black waters) result in the creation of Ptahil, the demiurge who creates the physical world including the ࡕࡉࡁࡉࡋ tibil (earth):

> When the Life, my Father spoke thus, Abatur arose, opened the gate (of the World of Light) and gazed into the black waters, and immediately his counterpart was formed in the black waters. Ptahil was formed and ascended to ࡁࡉࡕ ࡌࡉࡑࡓࡉࡀ bit miṣria the boundaries. Abatur examined Ptahil and said to him, 'Come, come Ptahil. You are the one whom I saw in the black waters.' . . . Abatur instructed him and said, 'Arise my son, condense a condensation in the black waters.[344]

In "Secret Adam", Lady Drower writes:

> "Abatur, pronounced Awathur, is a mystery-figure and the meaning of his name uncertain. He is sometimes called the 'Third Life'. Andreas, according to W. Brandt, derived the name from old Persian words meaning 'provided with (or "possessing"). .. His ideal is Abatur Rama, the 'Lofty Abatur'. The parallel with the Egyptian weigher of souls is obvious; the Persian Meher Davar at the Chinvat (Bridge of the Requiter) [345] also weighs the deeds of souls before they may pass over into the world of bliss."[346]

Abatur rips open the lower boundary of the World of Light by gazing below the Pleroma [347] into the "black waters" and sets into motion the creation of the physical world 'matter'.[348] It is as if Abutur was enchanted with darkness just like when the light became enamored of the image of light projected from Darkness in the Narcissus motif.[349] In the doctrine of the Sabians of Harran we read a similar motif: "The soul, turned at one time, towards the matter: she fell in love with it, and burning with desire to experience bodily pleasure, wished no more to be separated from it. Thus the world was born."[350] Theodore Bar-Konai's [351] sums up the doctrine of the "Kukeans"[352], a sect which was already in existence in the middle of the fourth century:

He also writes: "The curious fact should be noted here that the technical term pleroma appears, somewhat deformed but still clearly recognizable, in the exact Hebrew translation, ha-male', "the full" or "the fullness" (Scholem, 1962: 68 - 9). In Gnostic cosmology, the Pleroma is the shining spheres of the divinity with all its powers, the non material world, the dwelling place of the spirits, the archons and aeons (Doresse, 1958: 177). The Mandaean etymology for pleroma is ࡌࡀࡋࡀࡉࡉࡀ malaiia "fullness" and ࡌࡋࡀࡉࡉࡀ ࡖࡀࡋࡌࡀ malaiia ḏalma "fullness of the world" (MD, p. 243) ࡅࡄࡅࡀ ࡌࡋࡀࡉࡉࡀ ࡖࡀࡋࡌࡀ uhua mlaiia ḏalma "he (Ur, the king of darkness) became the fullness of the world or: he became the Pleroma of the cosmos" (GRR p. 99: 4).

Theodore bar Konai wrote the "Scholia", which is of a great value for research because of its reports about the Mandaeans and Manicheans (Rudoph, 1983: 20. See also Wasserstrom, 1995: 42).

On the other hand they might be the ࡒࡀࡍࡀࡉࡉࡀ qanaiia in Mandaean, are "smiths" or "potters". According to Robert Eisler, bar Konai (bar Kevani) says, 'The Dostai (followers of Dositheus, who became the leader of the disciples of John the Baptist after his death) are called in Maisan Mandaeans, in Beth-Aramajē Naşoraeans (Naşrāiā).' The "Cantaeans," quoted by Theodore as the precursors of the Mandaeans, who trace themselves to the Qenites, the group were also referred to as Καιvιται, Καιαοi etc. in the Septuagint as KENAIOI, KINAIOI, KAINAIOI, etc. Eisler believes that Bar Konai use of 'k' instead of 'q' goes back to the Greek influence (Eisler 1931: 616).

Mother of Life, and said that she made seventy worlds and twelve aeons.[353]

There are many parallels between Abatur and the similar heavenly beings in the above two tales, such as gazing into the water and seeing own image and becoming infatuated by it, and from this own image or coition with own image the cosmos (physical world) comes into being.[354] This might lead us to the conclusion that the Gnostic sects, including the Mandaeans, must have shared relatively close motifs.

Abatur was possessed with his ego and became arrogant, "He conducted himself like the Great Ones and said, 'I am the father of the uthras!'" [355] He abandoned the name which the Life gave him. He took no advice and did not perceive the turbid water and said, 'I shall call forth a world!' Abatur's rebellion was punished sternly by the higher deities. He was dethroned and expelled from the world of Light and he was assigned as the "Weigher" and judge of the souls:

> Then Hibil-Ziwa went and said to Abatur, 'Arise! set up your throne in the House of Boundaries and take over sovereignty. And sublimate that which is sound (good) from that which is base (lit. dregs) when Man's measure is full and he comes and is baptized in your Jordan, is weighed in your Scales, is sealed with your seal and rises up and dwells in your world.'[356]

§ 2. 2. 5. 2 - Abatur in the Incantations:

Abatur was invoked, along with other Mandaean deities, in few Mandaic incantations, such as in Lidzbarski's lead amulet from the third or fourth century A.D and published in 1909. He is invoked in this particular amulet to strengthen the knot[357] of the house of a certain Per Nukraiia son of Abandukt and to help him against evil doings of the planets.[358] Bhaq (another name of Abatur)[359] was conjured in bowl C (9931.4.1) to crush the power and the secret spells of Rūha against the client Duktan Purk, daughter of Bzurgunatai.[360]

Nathaniel Deutsch attempted to establish some resemblances between the Mandaic Abatur and the Jewish Metatron and to draw the attention to the "Mandaic awareness of Jewish angelogical tradition in general and of Metatron in particular is supported by the evidence of the magic bowls." [361] In this respect Wasserstrom has written: "Metatron remained alive in Mandaen magic for perhaps over a millennium."[362] Metatron (MYṬṬRWN) appears in one of the Mandaic incantations bowls (McCullough D) in which he was adjured, "In the name of Metatron HLDH who serves before the Curtain and who has compassion upon the countryside; he conjures the hundreds of fierce angels of Halahkin, who has sweetened meat for eating and wine for drinking." McCullough suggests that the writer of this incantation was influenced by the Jews and he dated the bowl 200 – 300 C.E.[363] Levene believes that the above invocation was quoted from "an unidentified Hekhalot text" and it is "an unusual but nevertheless good example of borrowing from Jewish sources".[364]

Knot sorcery was a favorite form of witchcraft, practiced in Arabia at the time of Mohammed, either to prevent evil against the client, or afflict harm on the foe. The knot is used as a powerful weapon against the forces of Darkness. The Redeemer Mnada d̠-Hiia says: "I wrapped his (the King of Darkness') navel with a veil, and tied a knot around his heart" (GRR, p. 101: 2. See also Yamauchi, 1967: 60).

Since Abatur son of Bihrat [365] is in charge of the gate of the World of Light, The Mandaeans believe that if they turn their faces, during mishaps, towards the North (the House of Abatur), and pray to the Life and to the other Mandaean deities, they receive their bless and comfort.

§ 2. 2. 5.3 - Abatur of the Scales ࡀࡁࡀࡕࡅࡓ ࡌࡅࡆࡀࡍࡉࡀ Abatur Muzania:

Abatur was chastised because he threatened the hierarchy of the World of Light when he declared clearly that he wants to be 'the king of the škinas' (the celestial abodes):

> And Abatur spoke to him (to Hibil-Ziwa): 'I want to be a king, and I want to hold the škinas!'[366]

The Realm of Light became enraged against Abatur because he created a world for his own and called himself, "Father of the uthras" without the endorsement of his Fathers:

> As Bhaq created and built, he stood and looked at this world. It was neither vast and nor great as the worlds of the Great Life. Once he looked at his world and called himself "the Father of the Uthras" ... the Place of Light was enraged against him.[367] Bhaq-Ziwa shone by himself,

He took no advice and did not perceive the turbid water.[368]

He instigated rebellion against the Great Life and created the division in the World of Light, which can not be repaired:

> Abatur caused the upper cleft which cannot be filled in all eternity.[369]

As a result of his defiance, Abatur was dethroned and expelled from the World of Light and he was made him ࡀࡁࡀࡕࡅࡓ ࡌࡅࡆࡀࡍࡉࡀ abatur muzania Abatur of the Scales, who is sitting between the ࡌࡀࡈࡀࡓࡀࡕࡉࡀ maṭaratia purgatories (or: watch-houses) [370] and the worlds of light weighing souls in his scale:

Scales and then allows whoever is worthy to proceed to the world of light. Abatur protested against this decision to Hibil-Ziwa, the envoy of the higher deities, and said to him:

> This you have arranged for me, (that I was obliged to leave) my land that is lofty and my spouses who are worthy and suitable and you brought me and made me "He-of the-Scales".[372]

Abatur was degraded because he sinned against his Parents; he strove for the Low House (physical world), so he was brought down off his throne. Abatur spoke out his lament and he wondered of what happened to him:

> I said to myself, "I would be a great one; who made me an inferior one in the Tibil?"
> I said to myself, "I would be a King; who sent me to the ends of the world?"
> I said to myself, "I would be an eminent one; who placed the Scales into my hands?"[373]

We can hear Abatur protest against the World of Light's decision in the Book of John (Draša d̠-Yahia). When the King heard Abatur's, protest he became angry with him:

> "I am not a Weigher! I am an uthra from the race of the good ones. I am not a Weigher! I am the son of kings. I wish not to be placed in these black waters, and to keep impure souls from passing by me." [374]

When Abatur said this, the King became full of anger and released a call into the world.[375]

Hence, Abatur took his case to the Pure Mana and asked him the reason he was chosen to the task of the Weigher of souls out of the other uthras:

> Then Abatur spoke said to the pure Mana, 'Why have you sent me from out of all these numerous uthras? [376]

The Mana told Abatur why he was chosen for this task and comforted him:

> Out of all the škinas and uthras there is none as you are. None in all these light worlds would be as gentle as you. You are gentle and you are suitable uthra. You are generous and are to the souls as a support. You feel sympathy with the souls and you are an acceptable judge.[377]

§ 2. 2. 5. 4 - Abatur; the Persian Rašn uRast ࡓࡀࡔࡍ ࡅࡓࡀࡎࡕ

Abatur can be associated with Rašnu the Persian god of justice and last judgement and the personification of righteousness. He was said to weigh the deeds of the soul during the three day period of evaluation following the death of an individual. Rašnu guards the Chinvat Bridge leading to heaven. He carries the golden scales with which he weighs the souls at Judgement.[378] Peculiarly, the Mandaeans' holy book Ginza Rba identifies Abatur with Rašnu:

Rašnu "the Judge" weighs the actions, and then words, then thoughts; but all three contribute to total of man's good or evil.[380] The Mandaean Abatur (Rašnu) and his son Ptahil induced Zaehner to argue that this episode is derived from the Persian Zervanite myth.[381]

Abatur is the guardian of maṭarata (a purgatory or watch-house) through which the nišmata souls go through to the world of Light after being purified from their contaminations. Those Naṣoraeans (Mandaeans) who are not worthy of the House of Life will be turned away and not allowed to go through the gate of Abatur:

> When the Naṣoraeans, who are not worthy of the House of Life, reach the gate of the house of Abatur will be turned away. From the house of Abatur they will be turned away and they will not behold the place of Light. [382]

On the other hand the great gate of Abatur is open to those who are worthy of the house of Life:

> Sure and assured, armed and prepared, resplendent and beauteous (are they) when the wreath with its mysteries is set on the heads of these souls of this ascent (masiqta) to the great gate of Abatur's house. They will open to them the great gate of Abatur's house, give them habitation in the škina of Abatur and will guard them by secret and watchful manas. [383]

It seems that Abatur was convinced to take his new office as the souls' judge who weighs the deeds and the rewards and separates nišimta the soul from rūha the spirit:

> I set forth and reached the watch-house (purgatory) of the ancient, the lofty, the occult, the guarded Abatur. I asked my brothers, the uthras, saying to them: "Whose watch-house (purgatory) is this, and who is held captive in it?" My brothers, the uthras, say to me: 'This watch-house belongs to the ancient, the lofty, the occult, the guarded Abatur. The Scales are set before him; he weighs the deeds and the rewards and unites the spirit with the soul. [384]

The Great Life explained to the proven pure one, who pleaded for Abatur, that he (the Life) cannot let Abatur's rebellious conduct to pass and he, therefore, must carry out his task as Abatur Muzania (Abatur-of-the-Scale) until the end of the world:

> For your fame's sake and Our name's sake. When he is sinning, who will (can) permit it? Who will let him be when he offends? And casts Our root into polluted waters? (One) who accepts favour from Us and then goes and casts it into the abode of the dark (powers)! [385]

§ 2. 2. 5. 5 - Abatur, the Symbol of Virility:

Since he is the father of the uthras and the creator god Ptahil, Abatur is depicted in some Mandaean scriptures as "tongue" and hypostatic "phallus"; The tongue is associated with the phallus:

> Abatur-Rama, whose name is "the Great Jordan of White Water", that he is called "the Tongue".[386] And when you pray the petition (CP p. 89 n. 80), you offer praise to the Father of Glory whose name is the Great Mind (Mana) and to the lofty Abatur whose name is "the Tongue". [387]

It is not quite clear what is meant by the "tongue" in these scriptures but Deutsch has explained that the tongue, according to the Zohar, "is considered analogous to the male organ" and "thus, as in the medieval Jewish sources, the Mandaean depictions of Abatur preserve the phenomenological link between the tongue and the phallus." [388] Deutsch also noticed, after studying question 166 in The Thousand and Twelve Questions, a number of striking parallels with kabalistic conceptions concerning the divine phallus such as the Mandaean appellation raza rba "great mystery" –referring to the phallus - which resembles the "identification of the phallic Sefirah Yesod as the "secret" or mystery in the Zohar".[389]

When Bhaq-Ziwa, who is identified with Abatur, declared himself as 'the father of the uthras' and when he begot Ptahil (the demiurge who created the cosmos) he became the symbol of the virility in the world beyond.[390] Alma Rišaia Zuṭa (The Lesser First World) describes him as the duna (penis),[391] the organ of fatherhood and as semen,[392] which is "venerated than all the mysteries":

§ 2. 2. 5. 6 - Abatur, the Heavenly Priest:

> Blessed are you, Lofty Abatur; blessed and established in your škinta in which you sit.[394]

The Mandaean priest in his škinta surrounded by the tarmidia (disciples) and ašgandia (messengers, helpers) depicts Abatur, the celestial priest, who sits in škinta surrounded by his uthras and performs the heavenly rituals.[395] Diwan Abatur[396] is one of the most important scrolls to the Mandaean priests. It explains the Mandaean priests the journey of the soul through different maṭaratia (watch-houses or purgatories) and the relative punishment which the sinner soul receives. Other diwans, such as Alma Rišaia Rba, Alma Rišaia Zoṭa, and Malkuta 'Laita, consist of instructions and commandments to the priests and some of their texts portray Abatur as the heavenly priest such as:

The word 'uthras refer to the ganzivri (archbishops), just as malkia ('kings") means "priests".[399] Since Abatur is the King of the škinas,[400] he is considered a heavenly Ganzibra (archbishop) in the Mandaean belief. The crown of priesthood is the 'crown of intermediation between the worlds of light and those of matter'.[401] Kurt Rudolph stated, "Out of celestial beings come types of celestial priests; the erring and rehabilitated priest is an especially favourite theme of this kind."[402]

Abatur is the heavenly being who is entitled to send ࡏࡍࡂࡉࡓࡕࡉࡀ 'ngirtia letters (secret messages)[403] to the lower worlds carrying certain instructions and commandments. He also receives the letters, which are sent by the priests, with the souls after death. A good example of the commandments sent to the lower world is written in the Mandaean Book of John (Draša d̲-Yahia). It was sent to John the Baptist when he refused to baptise ࡏࡉࡔࡅ 'išo (Jesus) because he was suspicious that Jesus will pervert the Law. After some lengthy arguments with Jesus, John the Baptist receives 'ngirta, a mandate, from the House of Abatur instructing John the Baptist to baptise Jesus:

embraced him and kissed him like a great one.[406] He bestowed names on him; names which are concealed and guarded in their place. He gave him the name "Gabrʿil" the Messenger.[407] In another passage of the Ginza we read:

> Abatur arose, opened the gate (of the World of Light) and stared into the black waters; and immediately his counterpart was formed in the black waters. Ptahil was formed and ascended to the boundary. Abatur's mind examined Ptahil, and Abatur said to his son Ptahil, "Come, come, Ptahil, you are the one whom I saw in the black waters." When he beheld him in his own form, that he was clothed in his robes of every kind and colour, he undressed him and took them from him; and he clothed him in (some of) his radiance and arrayed him in (some of) his light.[408]

We might assume that Ptahil owes his name to the act of opening the gate of heavens carried out by Abatur ࡒࡀࡌ ࡄࡅ ࡀࡁࡀࡕࡅࡓ ࡅࡐࡉࡄࡕࡀ ࡋࡁࡀࡁࡀ, qam hu Abatur upihta[409] lbaba.[410] On the other hand some scholars associate Ptahil's name with ࡐࡕࡄ PTH פתח ("open", "create") and his name is the combination of ࡐࡕࡄ+ࡏࡋ pth+ʿil (open + god) therefore his name might mean "the god who creates" or "god creates". In this respect Yamauchi is confident that the word the Gnostic beliefs, behind creating the world by a demiurge is to estrange the Supreme Being contact with matter and 'to interpolate intermediaries between Him and the world.' (Wilson, 1958: 102).

[406] In Mandaean myths Ptahil is the son of Hibil-Ziwa and Zahrail (Rūha's sister and identified with Ištar and Venus الزُهرة GRR book 5). He was married to her during his journey to the netherworld. He is considered the son of both Light and Darkness and therefore his creation of the physical world was unsuccessful because he himself was born of warring principles. (MII n. 5 p. 95).

[407] GRR p. 111: 21. Using the epithet of Gabriel, the messenger perhaps refers to Jewish-Samaritan Gnostic baptismal movements at the beginning of the first millennium. (Zaehner, 1955: 59 ff.)

Ptahil is the formation of Ptah (the Egyptian god) and El, and not from the word 'to open'.[411] In this respect Cyrus Gordon wrote: "Ptahil is composed of the Egyptian "Ptah" + Semitic "Il" and it would highlight the Egyptian component in Mandaeism as well as indicate that the name is Egypto-Semitic (signifying "Eg. Ptah = El/God")".[412] Widengren ascribes the difficulty in defining Ptahil to the fact that "god" is usually written עיל,[413] but Widengren was not aware that the guttural (ࡏ ע) occurs in Mandaic incantations in the name ࡐࡕࡀࡇࡏࡉࡋ Ptah'il פתחעיל.[414] It seems that the guttural ע ࡏ is assimilated in some Mandaean names such as ࡌࡀࡍࡃࡀ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ Manda d̲-Hiia מנדא דהייא instead of ࡌࡀࡍࡃࡏࡀ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ Mand'a d̲-Hiia מנדעא דהייא.[415]

Lidzbarski also connects this demiurge with the Egyptian creator-god Ptah.[416] Kraeling shares Lidzbarski's opinion and adds, 'pth to 'open' came to be used in the sense of 'create' but he believes that the name is not essentially Aramaic but a combination of ptah and 'il. He also refers to Bousset's argument which suggests that "the Mandaean Ptahil is in fact none other than the Iranian Yima. In support of this identification he adduces the observation that both Ptahil and Yima enter into relation with evil powers (daevas)[417], and that both experience a fall from grace by reason of this relationship."[418] Eisler points out that he finds in the angelology of the Mandaeans the remarkable interpretation of Ptah-il, i.e. the old Egyptian or Canaanite god of smithies and metal-engravers, as the creator of heaven as well as of mankind.'[419] What emphasizes Eisler assumption is that the Ginza describes Ptahil (Gabriel) as skillful (creator) as the Greek:

> And Gabriel, the messenger, is called into being, (then) he will be instructed to create the world. He will arrive and condense a condensation, and create the earth (skillfully) as the Greeks.[420]

There is a possible parallel proposed between the Mandaean Ptahil and the Egyptian god Ptah. Mercer noted that 'ptẖ sounds like the Hebrew פתח "to open" and that Ptah played an important role in the famous Egyptian ceremony of the "Opening of the Mouth", which resembles similar ceremony in the ancient Babylonia, designated to initiate an idol.[421] He also came up a very unlikely assumption when he stated: "it is neither impossible, nor even improbable, that the earliest worshippers of Ptah might have been Semites who made their way into Egypt, as others did before them and led by the god whom the called "the opener of the way"".[422] The rite of the "mouth opening" was part of the old lustration rites performed in Mesopotamia since the Third Dynasty of Ur.[423] Jonas also had no doubt that the name Ptahil, the Mandaean Demiurge, was taken from the Egyptian pantheon and "is connected with the symbolic role of Egypt as the representative of the material world."[424] On the other hand, Deutsch believes that there are considerable parallels between Abatur (Ptahil's father) and Sabaoth.[425] Both of them are enthroned on the gate of the World of Light and each one of them is related to the demiurge of the physical world: Abatur created Ptahil and Sabaoth created a host of angelic beings.[426]

[419] Eisler, 1931: 235. He makes this statement depending on the fact that the Naşoraeans (early Mandaeans) or the "keepers" of secrets are craftsmen in general (smiths, carpenters and boat-builders etc). For Ptah the Egyptian chief god of all handicraftsmen (see Budge, 1904: 500 ff.).

[422] Mercer, 1949: 148-9. The Mandaeans myth tells us that Egypt was their first dwelling and from there they migrated to ṭura ḏ-madai the Mountain of the Mandai (MII p. 10). Until recently a masiqta (ascension of the soul) ritual was performed for the Egyptians drowned while chasing Moses and the Jews across the yama ḏ-suf "the Red Sea" (SA p. xv and n. 2 p. xv).

[423] Jacobsen, 1976: 124. Lady Drower noted that "Nöldke suggests a connection between the Mandaean sacramental "wafer" (pihta), and the Babylonian rites of pit pī ("opening of the mouth") and mis pī ("washing of the mouth")" (MII n. 15, p. 122).

It is worthwhile to note that all sources mentioned above represent poor scholarship and assumptions based on very insufficient evidence. Therefore, Ptahil remains a very general name type, which doesn't really tell us anything of significance about him. This is one of the many reasons why Cyrus Gordon highlighted the significance of serious researches to be conducted on Mandaeism when he wrote:

> "Mandaic should be studied in depth by several circles of scholars, of whom the Gnostics are only one. To single out one of the many other fields: Mandaic is probably the most valuable aid for the study of the Babylonian Talmud."[427]

§ 2.2.6. 2. - Ptahil; the Creator of the Material World:

Ptahil is the Mandaean demiurge who created the physical world. He received a mandate from his father, the Second Life (Abatur) commanding him to leave the "World Beyond" and descend "below" to the "place where there is no škinas or worlds" to create a world and uthras for himself like the "sons of perfection".[428] In another passage of the Ginza we read: "Abatur instructed him (Ptahil) and said, [427] Gordon, JAOS, vol. 99, No. 3, 1979: 476.

[428] GRR, pp. 111, 112. Wilson defines the demiurge as: "god or father of all outside the Pleroma, the creator of all things psychic and hylic. He separated the two confused substances, and created things heavenly and earthly, heavy and light, higher and lower. He formed seven heavens, whence he is called the Hebdomad as their ruler, Achamoth being of the Ogdoad, recalling the archetypal Ogdoad of the Pleroma" (Wilson, 1958: 131).

"Arise, my son, condense a condensation in the black water."[429] But the Father of the Uthras (Abatur) forgot to instruct him against the odds neither equipped him with suitable means.[430] Ptahil descended below the škinas, towards the "place where there was no world". He waded in the in the filthy mud and turbid waters, but no solidification took place. He waded to his knees, to his thighs, but the waters did not solidify. Up to his first mouth (anus), up to his mouth, he stood in the water, but no solidification took place. He pronounced the name of the Life and the name of Manda ḏ-Hiia (the Gnosis of Life) and nothing happened. He cast some of the seven garments of radiance, light and glory upon the waters, but the waters remained fluid.[431]

When he sensed that the "living fire" in him changed, Ptahil engrossed in thought and decided to ascend to the Great (One) to receive the garment of the Living Flame.[432] In another passage of the Ginza, Ptahil descended to the world of his father Abatur and spoke to him, "My father, I took some of those seven garments, in which I was planted, and I entered the waters, but no earth was condensed. Then his father said to him, "O (you) sakla[433] (fool)! Take care that you do not put your self on a par with me. Take some of the seven garments of radiance, light and glory with which I clothed you and toss (some of them) into the black waters that a condensation may now take place."[434]

[429] Ibid 196: 8. In the scroll of Diwan Abatur, we read another version: "Abatur spoke to Ptahil and said to him, "Go, condense a condensation, and create the worlds and create creatures. And take with you three hundred and sixty thousand demons and devils that they dig out the Light-Euphrates and heap up its two banks. Then make a world and create creatures and plant plants. Go and propagate thy world and take the demon Qardum who loosens, liberates and waters the plants" (DA, p. 11).

[433] ࡎࡀࡊࡋࡀ sakla (fool) an epithet of the Gnostic demiurge Ialdabaoth (child of the void) or Samael (the blind god). It seems that different Gnostic confraternities used the term sakla to refer to the demiurge. The Gnostics consider themselves 'to be 'strangers,' exiled in the kingdom of Sakla, "the prince of darkness" (Deutsch 1999: 75 and Stroumsa 1984: 48, 120) For Sakla, the leader of the Fallen Angels, see Stroumsa 1984: 163. For Ialdabaoth, the Saklas who appoints seven kings over the seven heavens and five over the "chaos of the underworld" (Rudolph 1977: 79). The Saklas join the powers of Darkness to create Adam and Eve in order to entrap the elements of Light in the world through lust and the multiplication of humans (Stoyanov 2000: 110).

Though Ptahil failed in his first attempt, he succeeded, by the powers of the garments and the living flame which mingled with water and the material creation came into being. Ptahil solidified the black waters, spanned out the firmament and appointed boundaries to the worlds. When the firmament was spanned out he seized the navel of the earth and bound it to the centre of heavens.[435] Ptahil used seven ࡒࡀࡋࡉࡀ qalia "calls" in order to create the world: By his first call he solidified the earth and spanned out the heavens. By the second call he dispersed Jordans and canals. By the third he created the fish of the sea and birds of every type and variety. By the fourth he brought forth plants and seeds. By the fifth he created reptiles. By the sixth the whole structure of darkness came into being. By the seventh Rūha and her Seven planets came into being.[436] While Ptahil was engaged in creating the world, the Seven (planets) and the Twelve (sings of the Zodiac) and the Five (planets without the Sun and the Moon) stealthily climbed up and took their position in the vault.[437]

In another passage of the Ginza we read that although the process of creation was carried out by Ptahil against the wish of the Life because Ptahil threw the form, which the Second (Life) had formed, into the world of darkness and made creations and formed tribes which are not worthy of the House of Life (or: outside the House of Life),[438] the Life helped Abatur in obtaining the secret of solidification.[439] Abatur wrapped it (the secret) in his clean turban and delivered it to his son Ptahil. Ptahil went down again to the black waters and succeeded in solidifying earth and spanning out the firmament.[440]

Ptahil descendent into the black waters clad in garment of fire, and that the fire mingles with the water and the material world comes into being resembles the Zervanite myth where the male element, fire, fertilizing the female, water, in order to produce the cosmos. Zaehner believes that this Mandaean tale is derived from the same source as the Zarvanite myth, since the Mandaean religion distinguishes between two series of elements such as the living (good) fire and the devouring (evil) fire (Zaehner, 1955: 77).

[436] GRR, p. 414: 18.

[437] Some of the earlier forms of Gnosticism pointed that there was one God the Father, who created seven angels who created the world and made man in the likeness of the divine image (Wilson, 1958: 102-103).

It is notable in the Ginza that some passages describe Ptahil as an evil and a foolish creator and his house (the world) is taken from him.[441] Draša d̲-Yahia (the Book of John) tells us that he was appointed the guardian of the house until the end of the worlds.[442] In another passage from the Ginza we learn that Ptahil has been forgiven, by the higher deities of the World of Light, for creating the universe and he will be declared the king of the uthras and king of the Naşoraeans:

> Yōšamin and Abatur shall be baptized of the First Great Life in the Jordan. Afterwards Ptahil-Uthra shall be carried away from the putrid clouds in which he sits and purified in the Jordan of the First Life. In that Jordan his stench will be removed. He will be embraced by the First Life, and he will tell about the stocks and fetters which he endured in the world. He will tell about the pain which inflicted him from his father. He will be declared the King of Uthras, and will have authority upon the congregation of souls. He will be declared the King of the Naşoraeans, and prayer and praise will rise for him.[443]

§ 2.2.6.3 - The Creation of Adam:

There is more than one version in the Ginza for the creation of Adam. According to tractate 10 of the Ginza, Ptahil creates Adam according to his image with the help of the Planets. They create Adam and cast some of their spirits and some of their mysteries into him and his wife Eve but were unable to make him stand on his feet. Ptahil brings a "hidden mana" form his father Abatur and cast it into Adam and Eve. Only then Adam sneezes and stands on his feet:

> After Ptahil had created the world, he built his son Adam according to his form, and according to Adam's form Hawa (Eve) his was built. Pthail cast into Adam a kind of rūha spirit from his own rūha spirit,[444] and each of the Seven (planets) cast into Adam and his wife Hawa (Eve) some of his own mystery. However, Ptahil and Seven (Planets) who were with him could not raise Adam and his wife Hawa (Eve).[445] Therefore, Ptahil went towards his father Abatur, obtained a hidden mana, which was given to him from the House of the Life, brought it, and cast it into Adam and into his wife Hawa (Eve).... Adam sneezed and asked for the life.[446] Ptahil and the planets who were with him said to him (Adam): "Live, Adam!" Then Adam stood up, bowed down and praised that man who had opened his eyes and made him stand on his feet.[447]

[445] According to the Apocryphon of John, the seven powers contributed from their own elements the following "souls" for Adam: the "bone-soul", the "sinew-soul", the "flesh-soul", the "marrow-soul", the "skin-soul", and the "hair-soul". Rudolph comments: "In spite of the skill devoted to the formation of the psychical body it remains immobile and it is not possible to make him stand uptight. This gives "Wisdom" (sophia) opportunity to intervene in order to win back the power which through her error she had lost to her son the Demiurge." (Rudolph, 1983: 102)

[446] An Iraqi tradition is that sneezing is a sign of life. They tell stories about people who were thought to be dead but they returned to life after they sneezed. Sneezing for them, also, is a sign of warning i.e., if a person was about to depart and someone else sneezes, he postpones his departure for some time.

Tractate III (the subject of this research) of the Ginza Rba narrates the creation of Adam by Ptahil and the Planets as follows:

> When Ptahil came, he spoke to the planets: 'Let us create Adam that he may be king of the world', when he had spoken thus to them, they all consulted each other: 'Let us tell him that we want to create Adam and Hawa (Eve), because he belongs to us.' They said to him: "Come now, we will create Adam and Eve and make them the head of the whole generation." When the planets spoke thus to him Ptahil was troubled in his heart and said: 'If I by myself create Adam and Eve, the head of the generation, what will Adam (then) know what to do in the world?'[448] Then Ptahil-Uthra spoke to the Planets and said: "Adam is my son; he is the king of the world!" The Planets spoke to Ptahil saying: "What do we confide in and rely on, and what is our authority in the world?" Ptahil spoke to them and said: "You shall be his fosterer(s), and render him full service."
> They created Adam and laid him down, but there was no nišimta[449] soul in him. When they created Adam they were unable to cast a soul into him. They pleaded to Ayar-Ziqa (the ether wind) to hollow out his bones, and marrow be formed in them. That marrow be formed in them, that he might spring up and stand on his feet. They summoned ṣauta d̲'šata haita the splendor of the living flame that might illuminate his attire and he might spring up and stand on his feet. They sent for habla d̲šabria the mist of the streams and the fumes of the consuming fire to enter his trunk that he might clinch his

The Planets spoke to Ptahil saying: 'Allow us to cast into him some the rūha spirit which you brought with you from your father's house.' All the Planets exerted themselves, and the Lord of the World exerted himself. In spite of all their efforts, they could not make him stand on his feet. Ptahil set off in his glory and ascended to the Place of Light. He stood in the presence of the Father of the Uthra,[450] and his father spoke to him: "What have you accomplished?" He answered him: "All that I made has been successful, (but) my counterpart and yours have not been successful."[451]

The Father of the uthras raised himself, set forth, and hurried to atar kasia the secret place. He fetched the (great) mana, [452] which illuminates all corruption. He wrapped him (the mana) in his pure turban under the (spells) of the (secret) names which the Life gave him. He brought it hither and gave it to Ptahil, his son. When he gave it to Ptahil-Uthra, the Life summoned Hibil, Šitil and Anoš[453] the outstanding uthras who are flawless. He summoned them and gave them their orders, and warned them concerning the nišmata souls. He said to them: 'You be a guardian over them, so that all the worlds may know nothing about them. Let not the muddle-headed Ptahil know, [454] how the nišimta soul falls into the body. How the soul falls into the body and how the blood fills (lit: speak in) it and how the veins permeate it. Let the supporter (maulānā) Adakas-Mana be his protector.[455] . . . Ptahil wrapped him in his pure turban, and enfolded him in his garment. When Ptahil wanted to cast the soul into Adam's trunk, I (Manda d̲-Hiia) snatched it from his pocket. While Ptahil lifted Adam up, I erected him on his bones. While he laid his hands on him, I made him breathe the breath of the Great Ones. His body filled with marrow, and the radiance of the Life spoke in him. When the radiance of the Life spoke in him, Adakas-Ziwa ascended to his place.[456] I led him upwards to the House of the Great Ones; to the place where the Great One is enthroned. I entrusted him to the ganzibras Treasurers, the uthras who look after the Jordans. The Life thanked the uthra, who had brought the nišimta soul.[457]

§ 2.2.7 - Manda d̲-Hiia (Gnosis of Life)

§ 2.2.7.1 - The True Apostle of Light:

Manda d̲-Hiia is translated "knowledge of life", i. e. "gnosis". There was a debate on his name and the analogy of "manda" led by Pallis, since "knowledge" in the Mandaean language is ࡌࡀࡃࡉࡕࡀ madita, ࡉࡀࡃࡅࡕࡀ iaduta, ࡌࡀࡃࡀ madda or ࡌࡀࡃࡉࡄࡕࡀ madihta.[458] Manda d̲-Hiia is the outstanding figure in the Mandaean faith and the most revered deity.[459] Manda d̲-Hiia personifies the ࡌࡀࡍࡃࡀ manda "knowledge" of the great Mandaean deity ࡄࡉࡉࡀ hiia the Life.[460] From the course which the Mandaeans followed through history, some scholars went to assume that this sect adopted Manda d̲-Hiia as a messenger and a redeemer when the Naṣoraeans (the early Mandaeans) as part of their polemic against Christianity at the rise of the first millennium.[461] Many texts in the Ginza and in the other Mandaean manuscripts propose a shift from polytheism to Gnosticism has taken place sometime in the period from C.E. 300-600 as suggested by Brandt.[462]

Support for this hypothesis comes from one of the masiqta (ascension) hymns; the believers have forsaken images, pictures, idols and gods and have testified to the name of the great strange Life:

[461] Brandt believed of two schools of Mandaism: the Old Mandaean School, which lost its authority because of continually new influence especially Christianity; and the New School which he called "teaching of the king of Light" (Lichtkönigslehre). This school, he believes, in contrast to the older polytheistic from, is monotheistically oriented, even when marked with dualism. Brandt came to the conclusion that "In the course of the polemic against Christianity and its influence, the "reformer" of the Mandaean theology", the author of the Lichtkönigslehre represented a revelational activity of the Mandaean redeemer in Jerusalem and assumed also the name Nāṣoraean as a designation for the sect itself" (cited by Rudolph, HR, vol. 8, 1969: 211f).

[462] Rudolph, HR, 1969: 212.

'This hour I address to thee, my Lord, Manda d̲-Hiia, a vital petition, large and not small, for this congregation of people who have bent their knees to the ground and stretched forth their hands to the intermediate and upper (worlds). They have forsaken images, pictures and idols of clay, gods (made) of blocks of wood, and vain rites, and have testified to the name of the great, strange (sublime) Life. To them the gate of sin is closed and for them the gate of life is open. May our request, our prayer and our humble submission rise before the supreme Life which is above all works.'[463]

Manda d̲-Hiia often exchanges places with another light being, his son/brother, Hibil-Ziwa,[464] who descended to the seven layers of the world of darkness and came into conflict with the King of Darkness and obtained ࡐࡓࡅࡃࡒࡀ prudqa a "passport"[465] with ࡄࡀࡕࡌࡀ hatma a seal-impression[466] which enabled him to travel through the World of Darkness and come back to the World of Light.[467] During his journey Hibil-Ziwa could confuse Rūha (the goddess of the underworld) and obtain from her ࡂࡉࡌࡓࡀ ࡅࡌࡓࡀࡓࡀ the gimra umrara, the two secrets of the World of Darkness.[468]

[464] Hihil-Ziwa, is the light bearer; a saviour-spirit who descended to the underworld and brought back with him from the "Well of Darkness" the gimra (pearl, or: soul) and mrara (a sort of herb) which are considered the secrets of the World of Darkness. Cf. the Mandaean scroll masbuta d-Hibil-Ziwa "the Baptism of Hibil-Ziwa" (The Haran Gawaita and the Baptism of Hibil-Ziwa, translated by Drower, Vatican City, 1953).

[467] The journey of Hibil-Ziwa reminds us of the journey of Enkidu to the underworld. (GRR, book 5:1)

[468] The meaning of gimra umrara is obscure, perhaps indicating two things assuring the stability of the world of darkness (MD, p. 90).

The Mandaeans prayers recited during the rituals usually include the formula, "the name of Life and the name of Manda d̠-Hiia ("Knower of the Life") is pronounced over me." He is the "True Apostle of Light" as he describes himself:

> I am the Apostle of Light whom the Great One sent me into the world. The true Apostle I am, with whom there is no lie. The Chosen with whom there is no lie, there is not with him deficiency or fault. [469] I am apostle of Life, the true one, in whom there is no falsehood. [470]

Many Gnostic sects share the meaning of the apostle/redeemer, with some notable differences. According to the Manichaean cosmogony, the living Father sent his son to redeem the soul when he saw it suffering in the body. The son came and transformed himself into human form and appeared to men as a man. He made "creation for the salvation of souls and produced an instrument with twelve vessel; this is turned by sphere and draws up the souls of the dying. Then the great light takes them up with its rays, purifies them and passes them on to the moon and thus is filled the face of the moon . . . When the moon is full, it ferries the souls to the east. And again it fills the ferry and again it unloads as the souls are brought up by the vessels, until it has saved its own share of soul." [471]

§ 2.2.7.2 - The Creation of Manda d-Hiia

Three uthras (the sons of the Second Life 'Yōšamin') decided to descended below the hapiqia mia (streams of water) to create a world of their own and not to mention the name of the Life.[472] The Life complained to the Great Mana who dwells in the Great Pira and requested his counsel. In a countermove to the uthras' plan[473], the Great Mana created the astral messenger Kabar Rba or Kabr Ziwa, who is fact Manda d̲-Hiia.[474] It was by the request of the First Life the 'Gnosis of Life' came into being: "I am Manda d̲-Hiia, the emanation (lit. planting) of the Mighty First Life." [475] The Life instructed Manda d̲-Hiia that his creation preceded the creation of the uthras and his commission was predestined.[476] In this regard, Jonas writes: "The mission of this transcendent savior begins even before the creation of the world (since the fall of the divine element preceded the creation) and ran parallel with it."[477]

Manda d̲-Hiaa was promoted by the supreme beings of the World of Light and was made one of the Great Ones. He was given authority upon all worlds of Light and upon the uthras who dwell in the škinas and upon the underworld of darkness.[478] He was the only one worthy of the mission because he was the one who could restrain the renegade uthras and set the boundary stones (kudka).[479] He was hailed as the "great mirror of the uthras and the lustrous king of the all kings (or: angels)".[480]

§ 2.2.7.3 - Manda d-Hiia, the Mandaean Redeemer: [481]

The Mandaeans' concept of the redeemer is not that of Christianity. The Mandaean Redeemer does not descend to earth and redeem his followers through agony and sufferings. The Mandaean salvation, like the other Gnostic beliefs, is focused on the release of the soul, the mana divine particle of man, from the material world and subsequently joins its ࡃࡌࡅࡕࡀ dmuta counterpart in the World of Light.[482] This process is materialized, according to their faith, by means of gnosis (knowing) the Life and his messenger Manda d̲-Hiia (the Knower of Life) and through the cults of repeated maşbuta (baptism) in yardina "Jordan" [483] and masiqta (the ascension of the soul).[484] The Redeemer's duty is to awaken the souls to their heavenly origin and to provide them with necessary "gnosis" or "knowledge" to serve as "passwords" for their heavenly re-ascent.[485] Mandaeanism professed to bring salvation through knowledge; ignorance is a sin:

> Who illuminates (his heart) with illumination (knowledge) shall rise in the Place of Light; who cannot illuminate (his heart) with illumination (knowledge), shall be cut off from the Place of Light.[486]

Among the Mandaeans redeeming knowledge has been personalized in the figure of Manda d̲-Hiia.[487] The Redeemer is also "the good shepherd that leads his sheep to their fold."[488] The souls, that sinned because of the wicked angels, [illegible]

malakia, of this world, will appeal to Manda d̲-Hiia to save them from their sins and trespasses: "Manda d̲-Hiia, save us the darkness of this world in which we are cast!"[489] We also read in another passage the pleadings of the Mandaeans to Manda d̲-Hiia for the salvation of their souls: "Thou wilt raise us up as sinless and not as guilty, as virtues and not as vicious before thee, Manda d̲-Hiia."[490] It is only when the nišimta (soul) is enlightened by the "Gnosis of Life", then can return to the World of Light.[491] At the end of the world Manda d̲-Hiia shall reveal himself to sons of men and redeem them from darkness:

> A call rang out over the whole world, the splendor departed from every city. Manda d̲-Hiia revealed himself to the children of men and redeemed them from darkness into light.[492]

He is ࡁࡓ ࡄࡉࡉࡀ bar hiia the Son of Life who lifts up the souls of the faithful to the place where the Life is enthroned with his sweet voice.[493] Widengren says that the term "Son of Life" is found in the Acts of Thomas in praise of the Apostle of Life ܫܠܝܚܐ ܕܚܝܐ, "Christ".[494]

Manda d̲-Hiia is identified with Hermetic Man-Shepherd (Poimandres), Mind of all-masterhood (See Deutsch, p. 1999: 166). In this respect Drower writes: "The Hermetic writings have so much which corresponds closely to religious conceptions familiar to them in Naṣoraean gnosis that they would readily have identified the Hermes of the Poimandres as their own Manda d̲-Hiia or Mara d̲-Rabuta" (SA p. 112).

§ 2.2.7.4 - Manda d-Hiia and John the Baptist:

Manda d̲-Hiia appeared to John the Baptist as a child. As a miracle, Manda d̲-Hiia caused the Jordan to flood fiercely, then made it go dry. When John the Baptist beheld the miracles he believed in Manda d̲-Hiia (as a saviour). Then, he ordered the waters to return to the Jordan. All the fish of the sea and the birds of the sky returned to Jordan, too, reciting praise to Manda d̲-Hiia. At the end of the episode John the Baptist requested Manda d̲-Hiia to save his soul. Manda d̲-Hiia released John the Baptist from his physical form and led his soul to the World of Light.[495] Strangely, we read in the Ginza and in the book of masiqta (ascension) that Manda d̲-Hiia appeared in Jerusalem: "Manda d̲-Hiia appeared to the Jews (or: in Judea) like a Vine in Jerusalem."[496] He is the one who can open the doors of kušṭa (truth), reveals the mysteries and performs miracles in Jerusalem:

> You are the healer above all means of healing, a Lifter above all Up-lifters, a Radiance above all radiances and a Light above all lights, for it is you who opens doors of truth and reveals mysteries of wisdom and shows forth miracles in Jerusalem.[497] You confide demons and devils and frighten away the gods from their high places. Great is your name and praised is your name. You are the counterpart of Life, for you were in existence before all. [498]

§ 2.2.7.5 - Manda d-Hiia the Warrior:

§ 2.2.7.5.1 - Manda d-Hiia's Weapons:

Manda d̲-Hiaa, the valiant uthra, was the well prepared and armed apostle, who triumphed over the powers of darkness.[499] He is the heavenly warrior whom the gods in all the worlds feared: "When Manda d̲-Hiia appeared in the whole worlds, all the gods were aghast." [500] In order to fulfill his mission against the evil, he was equipped by the Great One with the following weapons besides the army of uthras:

(1) Radiance and Light. (2) a great attire (3) the margna (staff) of Living Water (4) the wreath of the Living Flame (5) the armor of the Great Ones[501] (6) A mace (club)[502] (7) a veil (net?),[503] and (8) a robe of the great ones.[504]

§ 2.2.7.5.2 - Manda d-Hiia Restrains the Rebellious 'Uthras:

When the Second Life and his sons, the uthras, determined to create a world of their own, the Great Life considered this intention as an act of rebellion. In order to foil the uthra's plot, the Great Ones commissioned Manda d̲-Hiia to reveal the rebels' conspiracy: "Rise above the uthras and see what they are planning and what they intend, they who say, "We will create a world". 'You have seen that they have forsaken the House of the Life and turned their faces to the place of Darkness.[505] Manda d̲-Hiaa was charged to bring order among the uthras and deliver them from failure. The Great One commanded him: 'zl 'l mardia d̲hšhka d̲'lan l̲biš mithašbia "March against the rebels of darkness who think out evil against us!"[506]

It is notable in tractate three of the Ginza, that the sequence of Manda d̲-Hiia's mission was interrupted; instead of descending towards the hapiqia maia (the streams of water) he went down towards the World of Darkness; and instead of restraining the defector uthras he defeated the evil powers of the World of Darkness. This confusion can be solved when the story is traced in the other chapters of the Ginza as well as in the other Mandaean writings such as draša d̲-iahia "the Book of John." In book 15 of the Ginza we read that the Great Ones commanded Manda d̲-Hiia to descend to the Second Life 'Yōšamin's abode to deter him and the rebellious uthras from their evil plans and to help him in accomplishing his work in a perfect order:

> For what reason the King of Light created you, and made you a king in Ayar (ether)? Why don't you go to the house of Yōšamin and arrange his works in perfect order? Yōšamin should know that the strength of the Life is greater than his futile strength.[507]

In another passage we find another reading:

> Then the Life called Yawar-Ziwa [508] on whose name nine hundred thousand uthras emerged. Then he created a form and gave it to him and said to him, 'Go, meet the Second (Life) with this form and lets us

> "Arise, go to the House of the Seven (planets), the idle Rebels of Darkness![516] Idle are the gloomy Rebels of Darkness, and there is no light among them."[517]

Manda ḏ-Hiia had some hesitation towards the mission, but after a prolonged persuasion by the Life it seems that he agreed to confront the powers of Darkness under some conditions. In response to his conditions, the higher deities of the World of Light promoted him and made him the "the King of the uthras", the "Lord of the Kušṭa' and the "Treasurer"". He was also given the authority upon all the world of Light and upon all the škinas and also upon the underworlds of Darkness.[518]

Manda ḏ-Hiia was engaged in an astral war with the evil powers of the World of Darkness before the creation of the cosmos. Before he descended to the underworld, Manda ḏ-Hiia did some reconnaissance of the dwelling of evil ones. He saw the furnaces of the consuming flame which was full of destroyers and dragons. § 2.2.7.5.4 - Mandada d-Hiia's Battle with the King of Darkness ('Ur)[520]:

When the Leviathan of the World of Darkness decided to swallow the world in order to cast down the Great Ones from their thrones, Manda d̲-Hiia appeared to him in the extensive lbuša garment of the Great Ones dnpiš umitar mn almea "which was more immense and surpassing from the worlds".[521] Manda d̲-Hiia showed him margina d̲mia hiia the staff of Living Water,[522] by which the rebels were crushed down. He showed him klil išata haita, "the crown of the living fire", which instilled terror into demons. The King of Darkness rose up and annihilated the whole world; he contained it with his strength and upalga d̲pumh̲ ubarqa qbar buried half of his mouth in the earth. He swallowed the black waters and gulped down all the demons and dewis and liliths and stood riqan "empty" (or: "naked") in the world. Manda d̲-Hiia approached the monster armed with strength of the Great One and some of his breath reached his garment, but the burning flame of the King of Darkness was extinguished and his navel fell upon the gate (lit: artery) of darkness and all darkness was formed from him. Manda d̲-Hiia seized his eyes and wrapped him with four shawls. He fettered the Evil's heart, dissolved his joints and crushed his liver. He folded his stomach with his bowels, wrapped his navel with a veil, tied a knot around his heart and cast poison in his entrails. He bound the King of Darkness with a fetter and put a muzzle on his mouth. The King of Darkness became tongue tied and retreated to his kanna place crying, "Alas, alas onto myself!"[523] Manda d̲-Hiia did not pay attention to the Evil's begging to forgive him and have mercy on him; instead he imprisoned him in his place and appointed rude giant guards to watch over him.[524]

Above him are the seven material firmament and below him the seven underworlds of darkness. He has fiery breath like a flame, and his belly is alternately fire and ice. Souls too impure to undergo the lighter purification of maṭarata (purgatory) are drawn into his belly, and amongst these are unbelievers" (MII p. 253, n. 3).

[521] The garment has secret powers against the enemies and confers superior power on the wearer and therefore it is a weapon. The garment of Manda d̲-Hiia has such magic powers that he could, with his other weapons, subdue the powers of Darkness Zaehner 1955: 118.

[522] Cf. the cedar staff 'the darling of the great gods' in the old Mesopotamian legends. The staff is the 'symbol of Life' and the sign of kingship which contains magical powers. (Widengren 1950: 8, 9). The Assyrians called the staff 'kakku' a weapon which is considered as divine symbol at the same time (Chicago Assyrian Dict., p. 50).

When the King of Darkness tried to get rid of his fetters, Manda d̲-Hiia rose by the powers of the Life and created an iron wall around him. He tied seven knots around him and wrapped him with twelve veils. He bound him with the great voice and fettered him with a fetter so the seven zahriria flashes (or: flames) departed him. He flung his club and struck him and split his head. He made him shriek like a woman and made him weep like a child. He made dung into his food and urine into his drink and extinguished his devouring and destroying fire. He deprived him from his lust (or: greed) and clothed him with wrath. When Manda d̲-Hiia was triumphed he erected a throne for the good ones and set up a glamorous light beside it.[525]

§ 2.2.7.5.5 - Mandada d-Hiia Thwarts Rūha's Plans to Seduce Adam:

Rūha[526] and her retinue, the planets and the demons, began forging plans to capture Adam and keep him in their world: "We will entrap and catch Adam and detain him with us in the world!" [527] They planned to entrap him with horns and flutes and draw him into their congregation.[528] They proposed to arrange a feast and practice razia d̠rhamta the "secrets of love", Rūha and her party went up the Mount Carmel and set up their assembly and began practicing the secrets of love and said: "We will perform the secret of love with myrtle and entrap the whole world. We will perform the mystery of love with wine and entrap the world by our drunkenness. We will perform the mystery of love with drinking water." [529] They took the living water and poured turbid water into it. They took the head of the tribe and practiced on him the mystery of love and of lust, through which all the worlds are inflamed. They practiced on him seduction, by which all the worlds are seduced. They practiced on him the mystery of drunkenness, by which all the worlds are made drunken. The worlds are made drunk by it and turn their faces to the sea of Sup.[530]

Adam, the son of Adam, was inflicted with hasiruta "blunder" and his eyes found no sleep. He left his mother, Hawa (Eve) and turned his back to his brothers while they were asleep. He climbed the walls of the fortress and headed towards the Rūha's assembly. Rūha welcomed him warmly and she laughed, gladdened and became rejoiced and all the Planets started to serve him.[531] They offered him a drink, once, twice, and three times until he was intoxicated and his body desired dance. Then Rūha took him by the hand unapšh šalth zaniuta "and he desired to fornicate with her".[532]

[530] GRR p. 132. The terms "drunkenness" and "intoxication" in Gnosticism refer to "ignorance" which is apposed by "sobriety" and "knowledge". Jonas believes that the term "intoxication" requires a special comment. He wrties, "The "drunkenness" of the world is a phenomenon peculiarly characteristic of the spiritual aspect of what the Gnostics understand by the term 'world'. It is induced by the "wine of ignorance" which the world everywhere proffers to man." He adds, "the ignorance of drunkenness is the soul's ignorance of itself, its origin and its situation in the alien world." To support this case, he cited the following from the Odes of Solomon XI. 6-8: "From the Lord's spring came speaking water in abundance to my lips. I drank and was drunken with the water of everlasting life, yet my drunkenness was not that of ignorance, but I turned away from vanity" (Jonas 1958: 71f.). ࡉࡀࡌࡀ ࡓࡁࡀ ࡖࡎࡅࡐ iama rba d̠-sup (often) the Great Ocean of destruction (MD, p. 323).

When he held her and kissed her and was about to sleep with her, Manda d-Hiia appeared to him in a cloud of radiance. He made Adam hear an overwhelming voice and made his heart fall from its support. He undid the spells of Rūha and Adam felt ashamed.[533] Manda d-Hiia shone in his pure garment and took away the secrets of Rūha and her party. He revealed their mysteries, discredited their speech and belied their oaths. He threw Rūha off her throne and held her back with a camel-bridle. He threw her down, struck her with his scourge and split her head open. He bound her and tied her up to the heart of heavens.[534] He grasped Šamiš[535] by the secret things (genitals) and made him like a woman. He made Yorba a sissy and struck Sin with his scourge. He seized kukba biša the evil planet and hurled him down.[536] He struck Bel (Jupiter) and removed the crown from his head. He smote Nirig (Mars) with his mace and amputated his limbs. He dealt with the planets who became arrogant towards the family of Life and exposed their follies to world.[537]

§ 2.2.7.6 - The Life Praises Manda d-Hiia for his Victory:

The Life thanked Manda ḏ-Hiia for his distinguished triumph over the King of Darkness and the other forces of Darkness and bestowed on him more glory than ever before. The Life hailed the strength and courage of the heavenly warrior who could valiantly defeat the devouring fire:

> The Life thanked me, and gave me more radiance (or: glory) and spoke to me, "Kušṭa preserves you, good one, and preserve the word you have spoken." The Life spoke blissfully to the uthras and said: "Hail the strength of the man who could cure the water with fire. Hail the strength of the man against whom the fire sinned not." The Uthra shone with his radiance, and trod out a path for the perfect ones and rewarded them fully.[538]

"At the end of the ceremony", the Life embraced and kissed the Uthra, and handed him the 'Kušṭa' like the great ones. Once again the Life and the rest of the uthras praised Manda ḏ-Hiia for his achievement by hailing him: abad ukašar qruia l'uthra ḏkul ḏtibad tikšar "He acted and seceded!" they hailed him, "Whatever you do you shall succeed!" [539]

[537] GRR pp. 140,141. Both narrations of Manda ḏ-Hiia's triumph over the powers of darkness hold traces of similar myths such as the Ugaritic myth of Baal who crushed Lotan, the swift serpent. The King of Darkness ('Ur) who was defeated by Manda ḏ-Hiia is similar to Leviathan, the monster, which was defeated by Yahweh at creation (Isaiah 27: 1) (Ringgren 1973: 149). Many resemblances are also found in the epic of Marduk's triumph over Tiamat (Jacobsen 1976: 175 ff.).

§ 2.2.7.8 - Manda d-Hiia, the Conjugal Advisor:

When Ptahil, with the help of Rūha and her retinue the Planets, finished creating Adam and Eve, Manda d̠-Hiia approached Adam in a corporeal form lest not to frighten him. He sat beside Adam and sprinkled the splendor of the Great Mana over him. Mand d̠-Hiia began to instruct him, with a sublime voice, and awakened his heart from his sleep.[540]

Manda d̠-Hiia thwarted the evil goals of the demons who intended to draw Adam to their congregation and destroyed their evil plans against him. Manda d̠-Hiia and the other uthras arranged a great wedding for Adam, in which they recited hymns and liturgies. They disgraced the words of Rūha and suppressed her seditious call. They eliminated the evil of the Planets and brought all the monsters to naught. Manda d̠-Hiia and his company of the uthras set up the root of life, and the Life triumphed and brought victory to Adam's race. They remained with Adam until Hawa (Eve) was in labour. Manda d̠-Hiia played the part of sabus 'nšia (conjugal instructor?) who instructed Adam how to marry a woman. Manda d̠-Hiia said: "Let the race of the Life be bountiful! The race of the Life will be bountiful, and from them the world will come to life. The world will come to life from them, and the Life will show them his gratitude, deliver them, and raise them from this world of the evil ones." [541]

Manda d̠-Hiia established Adam on top of the building like the great ones, and made Hawa (Eve) in the shape of the cloud of light. Manda d̠-Hiia appointed uthras to look after Adam and he was their leader. He began to teach Adam and his wife Hawa (Eve) wonderful hymns and the right rituals of masiqta "Ascension". He taught them prayers to the Life in order to strengthen their faith. He said to them: "You are raised and established in the place where the good ones are established. Amongst the Manas of Light you will be established." Manda d̲-Hiia sat and taught them like a teacher who taught his novice. He prayed for them and blessed them with the bless of the Great Ones. He prayed to Adam to rise and see the world of Light.

[540] in DY we read: "they created a messenger and sent him to the head of generation. He called out into the unrest of the world. Adam, who was lying down, awakened." (DY, p. 47) Rudolph believes that the "Gnostic view of the world demands revelation which comes outside the cosmos and displays the possibility of deliverance; for of himself man cannot escape from his prison in which according to this religion he is shut up. He is not only imprisoned but "asleep" or 'drunken'" (Rudolph, 1983: 119). For more details concerning the "call" and the "awakening", see Jonas 1958: pp. 80 ff.

§ 2.3 - The Third Account of Theogony:

§ 2.3 - The Third Account of Theogony:

In the third theogonic version the following variants are found in addition to the two preceding theogonic texts. In this text the Life instructs Manda d̠-Hiia concerning the creation. He informs him: (1) when the ࡐࡉࡓࡀ pira Fruit was inside the pira, ࡌࡀࡋࡊࡀ ࡖࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ malka d̠-nhūra (the King of Light) came into being. (2) From the King of Light, the Great Radiant Ayar (Ether) came into being and (3) from the Great Radiant Ayar, ࡏࡔࡀࡕࡀ ࡄࡀࡉࡕࡀ 'šata haita (the Living Fire) came into being (4) By the power of the King of Light, the Life, fruit and Jordan came into being and (5) from the living water (of the Jordan), the Life came into being (6) all the 'uthras came into being (Chart C).

In this version of creation we note that the main creator is ࡌࡀࡋࡊࡀ ࡖࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ malka d̠-nhūra the King of Light and not the Mana, and by his power the Life came into being. Also a new element is taking part in the process of creation. It is the ࡏࡔࡀࡕࡀ ࡄࡀࡉࡕࡀ 'šata haita the Living Fire from which ࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ nhūra (the light) emanated:

> Before all the worlds came into being there was this great fruit. When the great fruit was in the great fruit, the King of Light came into existence.[543] From the great and glorious King of Light the great ether of radiance came into being. From the great glorious King of Light Ayar Ziwa Rba ࡀࡉࡀࡓ ࡆࡉࡅࡀ ࡓࡁࡀ (the Great Radiant Ayar) came into being. From Ayar Ziwa Rba the living fire ࡏࡔࡀࡕࡀ ࡄࡀࡉࡕࡀ 'šata haita

[543] In the Gnostic (Mandaic) dualism there are two rival kings: malka d̠-nhura (the king of light) and malka d̠-hšuka (the king of darkness). Cf. Mazdaean cosmology: "In the beginning Ohrmazd (the Spirit of Good) was on high and dwelt in the Endless Light: he was characterized by omniscience and wisdom which some call Religion (dēn). Ahriman (the Spirit of Evil) was in the depths and dwelt in the endless Darkness: he was slow in knowledge and his will was to do harm. Between the kingdoms of light and darkness the Void which some call Vāy" (Zaehner 1955: 91, cited from Greater Bundahišn).

> was brought into being.[544] From the living fire, the light ࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ nhūra came into being. By the power of the King of Light, Life came into being and the great fruit. The great fruit came being, and in it the Jordan came into being. The great Jordan came into being. The great Jordan came into being, there came into being the living water. The radiant and resplendent water came into being, and from the living water, I, the Life, came into being. I, the Life, came into being, and then all the uthras came into being.[545]

§ 2.3.1 - The King of Light:

The King of Light is not mentioned in the opening of the prayers in the different chapters of the Manadaean scriptures. It is the Life and Manda d̲-Hiia (the Gnosis of Life) who enjoy this privilege. The King of Light has no role in the Mandaean rituals and rarely mentioned in their scrolls and he is mentioned only once in tractate III (The Story of Creation) of the Ginza. But the King of Light remains a major player in the dualist system of Mandaic Gnosticism.[546] Whether the Mandaeans represented the "King of Light" as their "one god" to prove to the Moslems, after their invasion to Iraq in the sixth century, that they were monotheist in order to avoid either converting into Islam or put to death,[547] remains an issue which needs to be investigated, as "the development of Mandaeism still remains one of the central problems of the history of religion." [546] The Manicheans believed that the "King of the Paradise of Light", who is God Most High, brought the revelation to Mani when he was twelve years old. Ibn al-Nadim, Fihrist, Beirut (1994); English translation: Dodge, L., London (1970) p. 774:
فلما تم له اثنتا عشرة سنة اتاه الوحي، على قوله، من ملك جنان النور، وهو الله تعالى عما يقوله وكان الملك الذي جاءه بالوحي يسمى التوم، وهو بالنبطية، ومعناه: القرين، فقال له اعتزل هذه الملة، فلست من اهلها، وعليك بالنزاهة وترك الشهوات، ولم يأذن لك ان تظهر لحداثة سنك، فلما اتم له أربع وعشرون سنة اتاه التوم فقال: قد حان لك ان تخرج فتنادي بأمرك.

[547] All none Moslems had to prove to the Moslem invaders that they were people of the book. All "infidels" had to either convert to Islam or put to death. Some sects preferred to follow the Taqia; that is pretend to be people of the book in order to avoid certain death. The Taqia (مبدأ التقية) was originated from Islam itself and means "hypocritical" or "prevention". It is a

On the other hand, the Mandaean scriptures describe the King of Light as anterior to all the mysteries – the Jordan, radiance, light and air and beams of light, and the crown, and kušṭa (covenant), pihta (sacred bread) and the myrtle wreath – each mystery is more revered and sublime than any one of its companions.[549] He is situated in the lofty north,[550] strong, beautiful, and glorious, the origin of all luminous beings and father of all uthras.[551] He is the true deity, the lofty king whose powers are endless and infinite. No death comes near him and fadedness does not touch his nature:

> The great Lord of all kings: nothing was when he was not and nothing would be were he not to be; death is not imposed on him and evanescence means nothing to him. His light illuminates and his radiance irradiates all the worlds, and the kings who stand before him and shine in their radiance and in the great light which rests upon them. He gave them prayer and praise, which settled in their hearts, those who stand in the clouds of light.[552]

The Mandaeans believe that stars and planets contain supernatural powers (spirits) which affect the destinies of mankind and these powers are obedient to Malka d̲-Nhūra the King of Light.[553] The Mandaeans personify the light by the great light spirit Malka d̲-Nhūra surrounded by countless numbers of melki (kings; beings of light).[554]

> The King is delighted with the children of light. He calls one (of them), and a thousand answer him. By his word he planted uthras, and by the word of his moth he made the perfect raising. King of all the uthras and škinas, great crown at the top of the heights, gentle one, who subdue powerful, might, that restrain the rebellious.[555]

No carpenter has built his throne and builder built his house. No one can visualize the nature of Malka d̲-Nhūra "the King of Light" and no one can comprehend the great Light. His sacred name is hidden from everyone, and no one can call him by his real name:

> No human carpenters constructed the throne beneath him; no master-builder in clay built the houses of his throne. He is King from the very beginning, whose kingdom lasts for ever and never passes away.[557]

§ 2.3.2 - ࡆࡉࡅࡀ ࡅࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ Ziwa uNhūra Radiance and Light:

Radiance is the active and the male power of light,[559] which accompanied the great Manas in their first emanation.[560] Radiance in 'the mystical teachings or inner gnosis of Mandaeans' represent the male factor, "whereas nhura light represent its female complement."[561] Radiance is considered the ancient Primal Father and referred to as pure "gold", where as the Light is the ancient Primal Mother and referred to as "silver":

> Now as to these two mysteries of ziwa and nhura (radiant light and diffuse light): know that they are the ancient primal Father and Mother. Pure gold is the mystery of the Father, its name is Radiance: silver is the Mother's mystery and its name is Light. Silver is the Mother's mystery [symbol] and its name is Light. The Crown is the Father's symbol and its name is Radiance: the myrtle-wreath the symbol of the Mother and its name is "Let there be Light". The "owner of a crown" [a priest] is concerned with the mystery of the Father. A Mandaean [layman] and his wife are occupied with the mystery of the Mother.[562]

There is more that one metaphor in the Mandaean dualism symbolizing sex and fecundity (male and female principles) such us: ziwa radiance and nhura light, aina wellspring and sindirka the palm tree, hiia Life and dmut-hiia counterpart or ṣauta companion, Jordan river (or: running water) and arqa earth. Some of the above ideas are found in a prayer known as "šal šulta" where the divine marriage is "typified in three allegorical pairs; Radiance and Light, Yawar-Ziwa and Simat-Hiia, and the Date-palm and wellspring":[563]

> Praised be the First Great Radiance and praised the First great Light. Praised be the mystic Tanna (womb?) which dwells in the great mystic First Wellspring and the First Date-palm. Praised be the great Yawar who was formed from the loins of Radiance. Praised is Simat-Hiia, Mother of all Kings, for from Her all world proceeded, because She was appointed as the result of secret mysteries.[564]

Light and Darkness is the main motif of the Mandaic Gnosticism and dualism. The whole existence consists of two worlds: the World of Light with its heavenly jordans and battalions of Beings of lights "uhtras", against the World of Darkness with its demons, liliths and evil beings. The hostility between these two worlds is eternal, but these worlds cannot be isolated because they derive their powers from each other:

> The worlds of darkness and the worlds of light are Body and Counterpart, (they are complements) of one another, neither can > remove from nor approach the other, nor can one distinguish either from its partner, moreover each derives strength from the other. [565]

The Mandaean literature informs us that Light came into existence by the power of the high divinities at the beginning of existence. It is the Light of the Great First Life which together with the Radiance encircle the Mana (the first intelligence):

> Let there be light, let there be light! Let there be light of the Great First Life![566] . Before the Mana there is light, behind the Mana glory, and at either side of the Mana radiance, brilliance and purity. [567]

During the baptism rituals, the priest proceeds towards the river, wades up in water, opens the gate of Light and compresses the evil elements of Darkness with his staff after the recitation of certain prayers. He commences these prayers with the name of the Life, the he praises the Radiance and the Light:

> In the name of the Life! Praised be the First Great Radiance and praised the Great First Light![568] "Strengthened and enhanced is he great mystery of radiance, light and glory which resteth on the mouth of the Great Life." [569]

Radiance and Light play an essential role in the religious life of the sect. For example; it is the duty of every Naşoraean (Mandaean) to carry out every single detail of the ritual in a perfect way, even when he wears his ritual rasta "outfit" and put on his turban, because his outfit symbolizes the Radiance and the Light:

During baptizing the Mandaean has to anoint with radiance and light, not in the name of a god or a spirit:

> Anoint with radiance, light and glory, the Oil wherewith I anointed and (which) I bestowed, not in the name of a god, not in the name of spirit, not in the name of messiah nor in the name of a temple-Ishtar. Nay, the oil with which I anointed, (the oil) which I bestowed is at my name, my Sign and (given) as the name and sign of a living, glorious, flourishing and steadfast race.[571]

§ 2.3.3 - ࡍࡅࡓࡀ ࡄࡀࡉࡕࡀ ‘Šata Haita The Living Fire:

The Mandaean literature do not provide us with sufficient knowledge concerning šata hiata “the living fire” or “the living flame” except it was created in the “house of Life”,[572] and that Ptahil fetched some of the living fire and tossed it, with a piece of his garment, into the black waters, and thus the earth condensed and became solid.[573] The living fire is a constructive element of creation in contrast with the šata ʼkilta “consuming fire” which is destructive.[574] The living fire along with the consuming fire spread among the stars.[575] The messengers and ʻutras are usually dressed in the garments of living fire.[576] Manda ḏ-Hiia used klila ḏ'šata haita the crown of the living fire in his battle with the King of Darkness.[577] The "living fire" is mentioned in Manichaean literature in phrases such as the "ships of living fire and water"[578] or the "wheels of the living fire".[579]

§ 2.3.4 - ࡏࡅࡕࡓࡀ The 'Uthra:

First of all, we have to admit that the word 'uthra is not easy to explain. The Mandaic Dictionary defines the word as "wealth" according to Nöldke,[580] whereas Drower defines it as an "eternal being; a spirit of light and life."[581] The word is derived from a root meaning "to increase", "be abounding",[582] and unlike malkia who are sometimes good and sometimes evil, 'uthras are invariably pure and beneficent.[583] These beings of light are comparable with the yazatas in Zoroastrianism. The yazatas (like the 'uthras) cannot be rendered as "gods" or "angels" but they are associated with the divine and perform mundane tasks. In contrast to the abhored daevas, the yazatas were capable of being worshipped. They are also the guardians of the celestial bodies and the messengers of Ahura Mazda. The chief Yazata is Mithra and some of the others include Daena, Mah, Rashnu, Tistrya, and Zam. Just like the case with the word "uthra', Boyce admits the difficulty in defining the word yazatas and prefers to leave it untraslated.[584]

In the Manichean Psalms of Thomas the sons of light are also called "the Riches" (Widengren, 1961: 93-4). Drower associates 'uthra with the Syriac ܥܬܪ "to be rich", "abounding" and finds no reason why 'uthra not to be translated as "wealth" and she does not agree with Lidzbarski's suggestion that the Mandaeans chose the word 'uthra to avoid confusion with Jewish and Moslem names for angels. She reaches the conclusion that the 'uthri might originally have been life-spirits bringing fertility and wealth in the shape of spring and rain. She bases her conclusion on W. Robertson Smith, who mentioned in his book Religion of the Semites, that there was a god in South Arabia named Athtar who presided over irrigation, and claimed that 'athari referred to being watered by the sky and fountains. Even the Mandaean liturgies cannot give us a satisfactory explanation concerning the 'uthras, except that they resemble radiance and rays of light and they do not lie. It is the Planets who lie and they will come to end on the great day of Sup:

> Who will come, who will tell me what uthras are like, what uthras resemble, and what do rays-of-light resemble? Uthras resemble Radiance, "Rays" resemble Light. Uthras pledge their word (lit. take oath) and do not lie, The planets lie: they Come to an end on the Great Last Day.[585]

According to Mandaeanism, Uthras were created when the ether-world came into being, and the ether-world was peopled by angelic beings, "uthras":

> In it (in the ether-world) ziwa Radiance will form itself and sublime Light nhūra be set up therein. In there will be uthras and Rays-of-Light will be established therein appearances that shine with lovely radiance.[586]

These beings are made of light, which emanated from radiance and from the living water, which gushed out from the Light. They are not First Emanations, but they were created by them:

> In the land of Light, the Life existed; the Life existed in the land of Light. And from the Life, water poured forth, water poured forth form the Life. And from the water Radiance emanated, and from Radiance, Light emanated, and from Light the uthras came into being, who are standing and praising the Life.[587]

The uthras are not like human beings. They do not need to communicate by means of vocal sounds; they communicate telepathically. They can read the thoughts of each other and converse to each other by means of baptism and masiqtas (rituals of ascension of the soul) and prayers. They are so swift and light and glow more than the stars (lamps):

> And that which conveys the intercourse of uthras is the sublime ether. And they are alike in the meditations of their hearts, talking with a person with their thoughts and not speaking (with their mouths). Uthras converse with one another by means of their baptism and masiqtas and their devotional prayers: the resemble stars which quickly come out and go in, the one with its fellow (- star), for they are swifter than the wind and as brilliant as lamps.[588]

The uthras are ancient and older than earth and the Planets :

Abatur is the father of the uthras. Hibil, Šitil and Anoš are the famous triad of uthras in the Mandaean tradition. Adathan and Yadathan, Šalmai and Nidbai, are another two famous pairs of uthras. Šalmai and Nidbai are the guardian spirits of the Jordan, the delegates of Manda ḏ-Hiia, who carry out the work of the Life. Adathan and Yadathan stand at the Gate of Life and praise and worship Life:

> (Meet is it) to praise, honour, magnify and bless Adathan and Yadthan, who stand at the Gate of Life, and praise and extol Life, And pray for the spirits and souls of righteous and believing people in the Place of Life. Book III of the Ginza Rba tells us that countless battalions of uthras came into being when the Life called forth "the Second Life". One of these uthras was Abatur, the eldest son of the Second Life who advised his father to defy the Life and create a new world.[592] They live with the sublime world of the King of Light in his abode that is translucent and bright, with great crowns on their heads. [593]

The Mandaeans avoid using the word (malka) for the heavenly beings. Malkia, "kings", apart from its literal and derived meaning when applied to priests, is a term which may indicate evil beings as well as good: there is a malka d̠-nhura (king of light) and malka d̠-hšuka (king of darkness):

> Alaha (god) descended from his loftiness and assumed the shape of malakia angels. The malakia angels put on the (masquerade) of demons and day by day they pervert the minds of men. They clench to the necks of priests, slaughterers and oracle-tellers and eat form their flesh until they are full. And drink from their blood until they are satisfied. They speak with (false) wisdom and deception and change the times.[594]

In the story of creation it is written that the higher deity, the Great Mana, bestowed the title "the king of the uthras" on Manda d̠-Hiia before sending him down to put an end to the mutiny of the Second Life's uthras:

> You are the king of uthras, the Lord of the kušṭa (covenant) and the Creator of the treasures, we give authority upon all the worlds of Light

The World of Light is located to the north where Abatur is enthroned. Mandaeans turn towards the Polar Star (Polaris), the region of the vault of heaven, during their prayers. The North is the source of light, instruction and healing. If a Mandaean wishes to pray and reflect, he faces the north and their dead are buried towards the north. Their bit-manda (temple) always faces the north. The House of Abatur (Abatur of the Scales) is situated north controlling the path which leads to the Realm of Light. From her long stay in Iraq and the extensive study and her lengthy observation of the Mandaeans rituals, Lady Drower believes that the climate of Mesopotamia was a main factor which made the Mandaeans chose the north as their Qiblah (direction for prayers) and the direction according to which they bury their dead.[601]

[601] The Mandeans believe that the north is the source of light and healing. On the contrary the Parsis had a natural hatred for the north because they believe that the north is the source of all evil (MII p. 18, n. 9).

The world of Light is a metaphysical world beyond the reach of the evil Planets. Physics does not apply and no gravity is needed; it is independent in its own laws:

> Their earth does not rest on anvils (: supports), their firmament does not rotate on wheels, the seven stars do not pass over them, and the Five and the Twelve do not control their destiny.[602]

§ 2.3.6 - ࡀࡋࡌࡀ ࡖࡄࡔࡅࡊࡀ alma d-hšuka The World of Darkness:

The World of Darkness is in contrast to the World of Light.[603] The World of Darkness is dominated by all kinds of demons and monsters and ruled by the King of Darkness. According to the Mandaeans, the earth of Darkness is located to the south of the earth of Light,[604] beneath the earth of Darkness:

> Beyond the earth of light downwards and beyond the earth Tibil, in the South there is that earth of darkness.[605]

The composition of the World of Darkness is different from the World of Light and do not resemble in any way that of the World of Light:

> It has a form which is different and isolate from the earth of light, for they are (both) different from each other in every quality and shape.[606]

Darkness exists through its own evil nature and the worlds of Darkness are numerous and without limit:

> Darkness exists through its own evil nature. It is a horrid darkness, a desolate gloominess which knows not the First and the Last.[607]

The Mandaeans believe that the underworld is made of six layers; this lowest (first) is copper, then iron, brass, steel, gold, silver and dust. 'Ur, the King of Darkness is confined in arqa d̠nhaša "the earth of copper" by Hibil-Ziwa.[608]

The inhabitants of the World of Darkness show no fidelity to their habitation. Their earth is black waters and their heights are deep darkness:

> The worlds of darkness are numerous and without end.[609] Broad and deep is the abode of evil, whose peoples showed no commitment to the place which is their endless habitation, whose kingdom came into being from themselves.[610] They came into being from the tanna (womb) and procreation of the Darkness and from the whole saka (extreme, limit) of the Black Waters.[611] Their earth is black water and their heights gloomy darkness.[612]

[illegible]

Manichaeism, which adopted the Persian dualism, also believes that the universe consists of two worlds: World of Light and the World of Darkness and Satan came into being from the World of Darkness, as we read in the Fihrist, Mani said: "From the land of Darkness there was Satan (al-Šayṭān), who is not eternal in his own person, but the elements of his ingredients are eternal. These elements of his ingredients became compound and brought Satan into existence" (The Fihrist of al-Nadim, tr. Dodge 1970: 778).

But Darkness and Light are bound together, and without darkness there was no light:

> For darkness and light are bound together: had there been no dark > then light would not have come into being. [613]

The Mandaeans envisaged that the "cosmos beyond" consists of two realms: Light and Darkness and each with its own rulers and subjects.[614] Those of Light are described as bhiria zidqa "the chosen righteous" who are ࡌࡀࡍࡃࡏ mand' "knowledgeable" of the Life and full with ṭabuta "goodness", while the sons of Darkness characterized as "foolish" or "evil":[615]

A world of turbulence without steadfastness, a world of darkness without light ... a world of death without eternal life, a world in which the good things perish and plans come to naught.[616]

Manda ḏ-Hiia provides us with a pictorial description of that world and its inhabitants, when he descended to the world of darkness:

> I went to the place of darkness; to the place where the evil ones dwell, and to the dwelling which is full of destroyer. (I went to) the place of the dragons, and to the furnaces of the consuming flames. To the furnaces of fire, whose flames ascend (and) reach the middle of firmament. I descended and found the rebellious monsters of the darkness. I descended and found them, as all of them plot in evilness.

The Mandaean myth portrays the King of Darkness (‘Ur) in different forms and shapes. Sometimes he is a gigantic reptile where his dragon nature appears and sometimes he is represented as a snake biting its tail (as he is drawn on the Mandaean talisman the skandola).[619] In her book The Mandaeans of Iraq and Iran Lady Drower gave a Mandaean drawing representing ‘Ur in the form of a louse whose body contains the worlds which extend towards the tail, seven in number: the first is the maṭarta of Šamiš, the second is the world of mšuni kušṭa (the Mandaean ideal world), the third is the world of the Mandaeans and the rest are maṭarthas (watch-houses). Above ‘Ur are the seven heavens and under his belly, which is of fire, there is the black water (oil) which produces fire. Beneath the black water are seven layers of copper-like earth.[620]

[619] In the Mandaean talismanic seal (“Skandola”) ‘Ur is portrayed as a serpent encircling the other elements of evil; the hornet, the scorpion and the lion (MII p. 38). On the other hand, Mead asserts that ‘Ur is originally the Chaldean Deus Lunus (snake); he is the oldest son of Rūha, the world-mother, and corresponds in some respects with the Yaldabaōth of “Ophite” origin (See Mead, 1924: 35 n. 2). Cf. Syriac incantation bowl 117ES where an image of a snake is surrounding the text and eating its own tail (Segal, 2000: 147 plate 134). See also C. H. Gordon, 'Leviathan: Symbol of Evil', apud Biblical Motifs, Origins and Transformations, ed. A. Altmann, Cambridge, (1966), 1-9.

The Ginza informs us that the King of Darkness was formed from the black waters and emerged through his own evil nature:

> From the black water the King of Darkness was formed, and emerged through his own evil nature. He waxed strong, mighty, and powerful, he called forth and propagated a thousand thousand evil generations without limit and myriad ugly creations beyond count.[621] That King of Darkness assumed all the forms of the creatures of the world: the head of the lion, the body of the dragon, the wings of the eagle, the back of the tortoise, the hands and feet of a monster. [622] He walks, he crawls, creeps, flies, screams, is rude, threatening, roars, groans, gives (insolent) winks, whistles, and knows all the languages of the world.[623] When he wants he stretches his body, and when he wants he makes himself small. He moves his handamh̠ "membrum" in and out, and owns (the genitals) of men and women. And when he shakes (perceives?) all the mysteries,[624] he rages with his voice, his word, his smoke, his breath, his eyes, his mouth, his hand, his leg, his strength, [622] The above description of the snake/dragon 'Ur resembles Akkadian horned serpent bašmu - the mythical monster created in the sea, 60 leagues long with multiple mouths and tongues. (Dalley, 1989: 323) Mani described al-Šayṭan "Satan" as follows: "His head is the head of a lion and is body like the body of a dragon (great serpent). His wing is like the wing of a bird, his tail like the tail of a great fish, and is four feet like the feet of the beast burden" (The Fihrist of al-Nadim, Dodge 1970: 778). The story of 'Ur's defeat on the hands of Manda d̠-Hiia is identical to Leviathan of the Bible, the monster which was defeated by Yahweh at creation, and also to the defeat of Lutan, the swift serpent, by Baal (see Ringgren, 1973: 148-9).

The following verse from the Book of John (draša d̠-iahiah) shows that this world is defined by darkness, and darkness by the world. It also indicates the contrast between the two different natures of the King of Light and the King of Darkness. This dualism reflects the Gnostic beliefs in general:[627]

> Two kings came into being (or: were there), two natures were fashioned: a king of this world and a king beyond the world. The king of these ages (or: aeons) put on a sword and crown of darkness. The crown of darkness he put on and took a sword in his right hand. A sword he took in his right hand and he stands there and slaughters his sons, and his sons slaughter each other. The king beyond the worlds put on a crown of light. A crown of light he put on and took Kušṭa (the Truth) in his right hand. Kušṭa he took in his right hand, he stands there and instructs his sons. Book V of the Ginza tells that 'Ur was the offspring of Rūha and her brother Gaf (one of the lords of the world of Darkness).[629] Other Gnostic stories report that "Pistis Sophia desired to produce alone, without her consort, a work that would be like unto the first-existing Light: it came forth as a celestial image which constituted a curtain between the higher realms of light and the later-born, inferior aeons; and shadow extends beneath the curtain, that is, on its outer side which faces away form the light. The shadow, which was called "Darkness," became matter; and out of this matter comes forth, as an abortion, the lion-shaped Ialdabaoth."[630]

Amazingly the Mandaean still preserve, in some of their literature, the biblical name ࡋࡉࡅࡀࡕࡉࡍ "Leviathan" identified with 'Ur. In ATŠ (The Thousand and Twelve Questions) he is portrayed as the serpent that swallows the sinners and the negligent priests. Also those who are attacked by a snake are "marked with the sign of Leviathan and become the portion of Darkness."[631] On the other hand the characterization of the Mandaean King of Darkness matches the depiction of the demiurge Ialdabaoth who has the aspect of a lion and a serpent cited in the Apocryphon of John. The Manichaean cosmogony relates that King of Light and the King of Darkness are engaged in fighting each other from the beginning and each of whom has his own realm, darkness by coincidence rose up out of his limits and attacked light (Gardner and Lieu, 2004: 182).

The forces of the World of Darkness consist of demons, dewis, (evil) spirits, hmurthas "amulet-spirits", liliths , 'kuris "temple-spirits", prikis "shrine-spirits", patikris "idol-demons", arkonis "archons", malakis "angels", nalais "vampires", niulis "hobgoblins", pigas "misadventure demons", pilgis "mutant demons", laṭabis "devils", lihanis "net-spirits", gadultas "ghosts", and saṭanis "Satans", all the hateful forms of darkness of every kind and variety, male and female of darkness.[633] These creatures are haškia "gloomy", 'kumia "black", ṭupšania "filthy", mriddia "rebellious", rgizia "furious", zidania "wrathful", zihirania "venomous", saklia "foolish", ndidia "repulsive", ṣahnia "stinking" and zapuria "putrid". Some among them are harašia "mute", ṭrišia "deaf", ṭmimia "insensible", tahmia "dull", algia "stuttering", dugia "unhearing", gugia "babbling", pigia "idiots", šgišia "frightful", laiadita "ignorant"; some among them are haṣipia "arrogant", hamimia hot-headed, taqipia "powerful", haripia "harsh", rugzania "ill-tempered", raktania "lustful", bnia zma "children of blood", (of) fanned fire, and overwhelming blaze. ..... > Dewis of bit nirig "the house of Mars" fall upon humans and fleece them and cleave their flesh and spill their blood on the ground.[636]

§ 2.3.9 - ࡓࡅࡄࡀ Rūha; the Queen of Darkness:

Rūha (resp. Namrūs or Hiwat)[637] is the Arch-demoness, the queen of Darkness.[638] She is the daughter of "Qin" the Mistress of Darkness. She is the ruler of the third maṭarta (watch-house)[639], and dwells in first underworld.[640] Rūha is the mother of the King of Darkness 'Ur,[641] and the mother of the Seven planets, the Twelve Signs of the Zodiac and the Five planets. She is considered as a kind of "'fallen wisdom figure" resembling Sophia in other Gnostic traditions:[642] she fights and suffers and appears in several realms at the same time.'[643] Rūha is the leader of the underworld forces and the "entity incorporation powers of darkness which the light-world had to conquer."[644] The Mandaeans use the term ࡍࡉࡔࡉࡌࡕࡀ nišimta for "soul" and ࡓࡅࡄࡀ rūha for "spirit". The expression rūha "spirit" stands on the lower level and according to Rudolph corresponds to the "soul" (psychē) in the Hellenistic sources.[645] Rūha is the immaterial part of man which influenced by physical desires.[646] Rūha's symbolical colour, according to the Mandaeans, is sky-blue, [647] and can appear as a woman of extreme beauty either in her blue mantle or naked, apparently, to seduce men.[648]

The flames of fire in the north oil fields of Kirkuk, the pitch in the western pitch mines of Hit on the Euphrates and the black waters (crude oil) of Ur, Missan and Basrah in the south inspired the old Mesopotamians to portray a superlative revelation of the underworld. [642] Buckley, HR 1982: 60. The western female figure of Sophia "Wisdom" is unknown in Mandaeanism, nevertheless, the Ginza connects Rūha with false wisdom: [illegible]

In Book VI of the Ginza Rba (the book of "Dinanukt") Rūha describes her self as "light and darkness", "error and truth", "destruction and structure" etc., in clear dualist terms:

> I am the life which exists since eternity. I am the kušṭa which was from afore-the beginning. I am the radiance, I am the light, I am the death, I am the life, I am the darkness, I am the light, I am the error, I am the truth, I am the destruction and I am the structure, I am the offence (accidental disqualification for ritual etc.) and its purification. I am the outstanding being who is prior to that (one) who built the heavens and earth.[649]

ࡌࡀࡌࡋࡉࡋࡀ mamlila bhukmat hrara "she talks with the wisdom of an illusionist" (GRR book 3, p. 90: 5).

[643] Buckley, HR 1980: 260. Jonas has no answer to "how this figure 'Wisdom', or at least its name, came to be combined in Gnostic thought with the moon-, mother-, and love-goddess of Near Eastern religion, to form that ambiguous figure encompassing the whole scale from the highest to the lowest, from the most spiritual to the utterly sensual (as expressed in the very combination "Sophia-Prunikos", "Wisdom the Whore" " (Jonas 1958: 176-177).

[644] Buckley, HR 1982: 63. In her research about the Rūha, Buckley found striking resemblances between Rūha and "The thunder: Perfect Mind" in the Nag Hammadi Library (see also Buckley, HR, 1980: 264).

§ 2.3.9.1 - ࡓࡅࡄࡀ Rūha: The Mother of the Seven Planets, the Twelve Signs of the Zodiac and the Five Monsters:

When Rūha (the goddess of the Underworld and mother of all evil) [650] realized that Ptahil was having difficulties in his first attempt to create the world, she committed incest three times with 'Ur (the King of Darkness)[651] in order to produce the luminaries. In the first time she approached Ur, as his mother, and said to him, "Arise and sleep with your mother and you will be freed from your fetter!" He slept with her and after seven days she bore the Seven (planets),[652] but her offspring did not make her happy: "when she beheld them, her heart fell from its support". In the second time she approached him as his sister, and said to him, "I am your sister; if you sleep with me your strength will be twice as much." He slept with her and after twelve days she bore the Twelve (signs of the Zodiac) and again they did not please her. In the third time, she approached him as his daughter and said to him, "Rise, my father, and behold your daughter! Embrace me and kiss me and sleep with me and [650] Jonas writes, 'Rūha, literally "spirit." The perversion of this term to denote the highest personification of evil is an interesting episode in the history of religion, all the more paradoxical in view of the fact that the full title of this anti-divine figure is Rūha d̲-Qudša, i.e., "the Holy Spirit." (Jonas 1958: 72 n. 25). DA gives Rūha seven names: "she enflames the womb", "treasure", "She-lusted-after", "She-conserved", "Drop", "Qin"(the queen, mistress of darkness. Often identified with Rūha) , "She-loved-these". DA p. 38.

[651] The Mandaean Leviathan, the father of the Seven (planets), the Twelve (signs of the Zodiac) and the Five (the planets less the Sun and the Moon). Some scholars connect him with Tiamat, the chaos monster who was killed by Marduk. (Jonas 1958: 117). He is the offspring of Rūha and Gaf (one of the Giants of the World of Darkness) (see book 5 of the Ginza Rba). He is the dragon which encircles the whole world and that no one can match his power (GRL p. 11: 11). Budge writes, "In some portion of the Black Water dwells a great she-devil called Rūha, and her husband 'Ur, who is the god of Darkness, and is the great antagonist of the god of Light. Here we have we have a cosmogony derived from the ancient Sumerians, and Tiamat, Kingu and Marduk under other names, and we may regard the Mandaeans as the representatives of the ancient worshippers of Ea, the great Water-god of Eridu" (Budge 1930: 240).

[652] The seven "planets" were gods in the Babylonian pantheon, including the sun and the moon. (Wilson, 1958: 10). Gnosticism, in general, considered the seven planets as the seven spheres which separated the soul from its heavenly home (Ibid 105).

gaze your fill at the world." Again he slept with her and she conceived five "monsters" (the planets without the Sun and the Moon), and again they were not what Rūha wished for. [653] Rūha could not achieve her goals; instead she lost her magical powers and failed to free her son Ur from his fetters.[654]

§ 2.3.9.2 - ࡓࡅࡄࡀ ࡌࡀࡎࡈࡀࡍࡉࡕࡀ rūha masṭanita "Rūha, the Seductress":

Rūha d̲-Qudša "Holy-Spirit"[655] is an epithet for Rūha, a personification of the emotional, lower and feminine elements in human personality.[656] She is the "desirous" or "to make love sick" a symbol of ࡁࡀࡆࡍࡀࡒࡉࡕࡀ baznaqita "lust".[657] Rūha's epithet "qudša" corresponds to a category of cultic staff of Ištar which includes female prostitutes called qadištu.[658] We read in the Ginza that the other epithet of Rūha is, [illegible] d̲libat 'stra amamit "Libat-Ištar-Amamit."[659]

[653] GRR p. 112: 14 ff. These three acts of incest show clearly that the planets are the product of evil. Zaehner stated that consanguineous marriage is of Magian origin and that the Rūha and Ur act of incest is similar to Ohrmazd's consanguineous marriages (intercourse) with his mother, his sister and his daughter. Zaehner mentions, according to the Acts of Pusai, that the Sun, Moon, and stars were the children of Ohramazd. These three consanguineous marriages were considered the most holy of all among the Zoroastrians (Zaehner 1955: 154, 5). Jonas suggests that "the spheres are the seats of the Archons, especially of the "Seven" that is, of the planetary gods borrowed from the Babylonian pantheon" (Jonas 1958: 43). (In spite of "archon" is of western source, we find ࡀࡓࡊࡅࡍ arkun "archon" in some Mandaean texts such as the Ginza p. 334: 14, "archon" also occurs in Manichaeism (see Widengren 1961, English translation 1965: 55).

[654] Zaehner could establish some resemblances between Rūha and her son Ur on the one hand, and between Āz and Ahriman on the other. Āz, who belongs to Zervanite demonology in old Persia, is the "personification of concupiscence – acquisitiveness, gluttony, and lust, and perhaps much more besides.' In this respect (based on Alexander of Lycopolis) he writes: "Āz is the mother of all the demons and the greatest of them. In the diabolical hierarchy she is always mentioned first, taking precedence over Ahriman. Her relationship with the latter is exactly parallel to the relationship of the female Rūhā to the male Ur in the Mandaean scriptures. Ur is the king of darkness; Rūhā is his mother and stands for totality of evil." (For mote details concerning the Persian Demon Āz, and her resemblances with the Mandaean Rūha, see Zaehner 1955: 166).

[655] Rūha has other epithets: ࡓࡅࡄࡀ ࡖࡒࡅࡃࡔࡀ ࡖࡋࡉࡁࡀࡕ ࡏࡎࡕࡓࡀ ࡀࡌࡀࡌࡉࡕ ࡔࡅࡌࡀ rūha d̲qudša d̲libat ʿstra amamit šuma "she is Rūha d̲-Qudša whose name is "Libat-Ištar-Amamit" (GRR p. 62: 19) Rūha d̲-Qudša is not mentioned in esoteric writings (SA p. 47).

[656] CP, p. 291 n. 2. Jonas believes that the perversion of the term rūha "spirit" to "donate the highest personification of evil is an interesting episode in the history of religion" (Jonas 1958: 72, n. 26).

[657] CP 291 n. 2.

She conspired with the Planets to entrap Adam and install him in their congregation; in the earth of Tibil. She forged plans to seduce him with horns and flutes and seduce the whole tribe of Life and cut it off with her in the world. Rūha and her entourage practiced the mysteries of love in order to seduce the whole world. They took the living water and poured turbid water in it. They took the head of the tribe and practiced on him the mystery of love and lust, through which the whole world are inflamed. They practiced on him the mystery of drunkenness, by which all the worlds are made drunken. The world became drunk and turned their faces towards the great ocean of Sup.[660]

Woe to those who have been tempted by Rūha for they shall be swallowed by the demon Karapiun "the Swallower":

> I reached that watch-house of Rūha d̲-Qudša who sits upon the mouth of Karapiun the Swallower (name of a demon) and (puts) the harp of lust on her shoulder . . . And she brings temptation. She speaks with pipes (or: zither) and calls upon the twelve men, the merchants, who believe in her.[661]

[658] Ringgren 1973: 81. In Babylon they were known as Ištaritu – women of Ištar. However, Qadishtu is an Akkadian name meaning sacred women. In the temple at Erech they were called Nu-gig – the pure or spotless. (See Westenholz, 1989 pp. 245-265, esp. p. 250) On the other hand Jonas believes that the Rūha d̲-Qudša "the Holy Spirit" indicates the violent hostility of the Mandaeanss towards Christianity (Jonas, 1958: p. 72 n. 25), see also SA, p. 47 ff.).

Rūha assisted Ptahil (the Mandaean demiurge) in creating the physical world, infusing some of her secrets in this creation.[662] Ptahil created Adam after his image and Hawa (Eve) after the image of Rūha:

> Ptahil spoke to Rūha and her angels, "I will create a male after my image and female after your image. We shall call the male Adam and the female Hawa (Eve)."[663]

Rūha is an illusionist who can manipulate and mix times.[664] She appeared to ࡀࡃࡀࡌ ࡁࡓ ࡀࡃࡀࡌ adam br adam Adam, the son of Adam, in the image of his wife (and sister) Hawa (Eve) and seduced him to fornicate with her.[665] But the messenger Manda d̠-Hiia could thwart her plans at the last moment and saved Adam, the son of Adam from her seduction.[666] She is connected with pollution and uncleanness; women in general are considered a source of pollution because of their nature.[667] The Mandaean legend tells us that Rūha disguised herself as "Anhuraita", Noah's wife, and Noah took her and she became pregnant and brought forth three sons: Ham, Yam and Yafet.[668]

At the end of the worlds Rūha, the Planets together with the wicked and the unbelievers will be swallowed by the great Leviathan 'Ur.[669]

> Rūha and mšiha (Jesus) and the Planets and all those souls who confess them, will call each other and reach each other, and lead each other by the hand. They are to be bound and fettered and then, like a pomegranate of lead, will depart and fall into 'Ur, the lord of Darkness, into his huge interior. [671] ࡄࡉࡉࡀ hiia Life, the main Mandaean deity (See above §2.2.2).

[672] ࡍࡅࡊࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ nukraiia "alien" or "strange", theologically "inconceivable", "remote", "indefinable", is a constant characteristic of the "Life", the main deity in the Mandaean belief. The formula, "In the name of the great first alien Life from the countless world of light which is above all deeds" speaks of the "first"' Life 'that is above all deeds (or: creations)", i.e., above the world and "free from any kind of relation to the world" (Rudolf, 1983: 62). The Mandaean belief consider the Life Life ࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡁࡀࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ hiia baraiia is an "outer entity" and its home is "outside" in the world "beyond". (CP p. 78). Jonas finds "The concept of the alien Life is one of the impressive word-symbols which we encounter in Gnostic speech, and it is new in the history of human speech in general" (Jonas, 1958: 49).

[673] ࡀࡋࡌࡉࡀ worlds: According to the Gnostic view, the earth is set in the centre of the cosmos and surrounded by the air and the eight heavenly spheres which consist of the seven planets. "Beyond them lies the realm of the unknown god, the Pleroma (the "fullness"), with its own graduated worlds (aeons)" (Rudolph, 1983: 67). Jonas believes that the "worlds" of the Mandaeans correspond the "aeons" of Hellenistic Gnosticism (Jonas, 1958: 52).

[674] Concerning the raza "mystery" Wasserstrom writes: "The "great mystery" of Mazdak, the "raza rabba" of the Mandaeans, and the "raza rabba" of Jewish mysticism appear to have been technical terms in a common late-antique Mesopotamian cosmic semiotics" (Wasserstrom, 1995: 42 n. 115).

[675] ࡐࡉࡓࡀ pira (פירא) fruit, used often as gnostic term (καρπος) as an expression of emanation. (MD p. 371), (see above §2.1.1).

[676] ࡀࡉࡀࡓ aiar (αηρ) the upper atmosphere, air, ether, wind. The genie of the Upper Air. (MD p. 14) (see above § 2.2.2)

[677] ࡌࡀࡍࡀ mana (מאנא) vessel, garment, utensil, instrument, implement (ibid p. 246). The word mana when meaning "mind', "thought", "intelligence" is of non-Semitic derivation: the Aramaic mana is "garment", "robe", "vehicle", "vessel", "instrument". Lady Drower stated: "There is often word-play on the two meanings, and this passed into other Gnostic literature so that "robe" or "vessel" or "vehicle" is used as a cryptogram for mana meaning "mind" or "soul". In general, Mana in a cosmic sense is equivalent to the Stoic, Valantinian, and Sethian Νους, 'the emanation of the Forefather" (SA, p. 2 n. 1), (see above § 2.1.2).

[678] The word kabbīr "strong, mighty" appears in the Bible: Isa 10: 13, 16: 14, Job 8:2, 15: 10 etc. (for more details concerning kabbīr see Rendsburg G. A., "kabbīr in Biblical Hebrew", JAOS, vol. 112, (1992), pp. 649-651).

[679] ࡆࡉࡅࡀ ziua, ziu (זיוא) (a) brightness, brilliance, light, radiance (b) often used as an attribute or name of uthras, being of light, glorious being (MD p. 166), (see above § 2.3. 2).

[680] ࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ nhura, anhura (נהורא) light. The implication that ziwa (radiance is an approximate translation), the conjuction of nhura, is an active creative male principle and light a receptive, passive (female) principle occurs more than once in ATŠ. (SA p. 6), (see above § 2.3. 2).

[684] ࡉࡀࡓࡃࡍࡀ iardina (Aram. st. emph. for הירדן) Jordan, running water, river, flowing stream. The name of the Biblical Jordan was employed in the earliest Gnostic systems, and notably in that of the Peratae (who were in the Euphrates region) (Schaf-Herzog VII-§11, 12 [p. 150-1]. See also Albright, AJSLL, 1920: 292-3) Drower believes that yardina has no reference to the river Jordan in Palestine. By Mandaeans, both Jordan and Nile are called the Ardana or Ardan (MII p. xxiv note 4.), (See above § 2.1.4).

[685] ࡔࡀࡓࡔࡀ šarša or širša: root, tribe, family. Sometimes with religious meaning širša taqna "the Mandaean faith" (MD pp. 463-4) BL 23601 ࡔࡉࡓࡔࡉࡀ.

[793] The idea of rebels who are subdued by "Manda d-Hiia" is common in Mandaean writings. The following passage describes the conflict between Light and Darkness, the main Gnostic principle in the Mandaean belief. It also refers to Yōšamin's "the Second Life" revolt against his father, "the Life" :
"From the day when the Evil one began to think , the evil was molded in him. He was angry in a great anger and made war with the Light. The Messenger was sent out to tread down the power of the Rebels." (Draša dYahya 'The Book of John" p. 48 = Lidzbarski's manuscript, Das Johannesbuch p. 51) The text:

In the Mandaean literature Rūha as a fallen wisdom figure resembles Sophia (Wisdom) in other Gnostic traditions. However, Qadishtu is an Akkadian name meaning Sacred women. In Babylon they were known as Ištaritu – women of Ištar. In (GRR f. 31v: 19) she is Rūha d̲-Qudša whose name is Libat-Ištar-Amamit ࡓࡅࡄࡀ ࡖࡒࡅࡃࡔࡀ ࡖࡔࡅࡌࡇ ࡋࡉࡁࡀࡕ ࡀࡎࡕࡀࡓ ࡀࡌࡀࡌࡉࡕ. Rūha is the daughter of Qin, she was married to her brother Gaf. She was taken to the upper world by Hibil-Ziwa, and brought the monster-child 'Ur to birth. She became 'Ur's paramour, and had by him two sets of children, the seven planets and the twelve Houses of the Zodiac. (see above §2.3.9).

[825] Hiwat or Hivat Lidzbarski from hiuia, pointing to חות as a name of the goddess of the underworld in Carthaginian inscription (MD p. 142). Cf. רבת חות אלת מלכת שיסכרא "the lady Hebat (i.e. the Hurrian goddess H̲epat), the goddess queen of Išh̲ara. Also Hewwat the goddess (See G. Levi Della Vida, "A Hurrian Goddess at Carthage?", JAOS, vol. 68, No. 3, 1948, pp. 148-149). A Hurrian rock relief (mid-thirteenth cent. B.C.) shows the great queen Puduhepa pouring libation to Hepat (Alexander, JNES, vol. 36, No. 3, (1977) pp. 199-207, esp. 199). Mountain gods and goddesses were commonly worshiped in Anatolia and Syria. At Yazili Kaya, the goddess Hipat stands on an animal, standing itself on blocks suggesting mountains, while her consort Teshub stands on the necks of two mountain-gods (Barnett, "A Winged Goddess of Wine on an Electrum Plaque", Anatolian Studies, vol. 3, (1980), pp. 169-178, esp. p. 177). H̲epat is a Hurrian goddess, the consort of the weather god Teshub. She was called Queen of Heaven and was assimilated by the Hittites to their national goddess, the sun goddess of Arinna. Teshub and Hebat had cult centres at Kummanni (classical Comana Cappadociae) and at Aleppo (Halab) and other cities in the region of the Taurus Mountains. [851] ࡏࡅࡓ 'Ur, the Leviathan, in the Mandaean system is the father of the Seven (planets), the Twelve (signs of the Zodiac) and the Five (monsters). The mythological archetype of this figure is he Babylonian Tia'mat, the chaos-monster slain by Marduk in the history of creation. Jonas believes that the closest Gnostic parallel to our tale is to be found in the Jewish apocryphal Acts of Kyriakos and Julitta, "where the prayer of Kyriakos relates how the hero, sent out by his Mother into foreign land, the "city of darkness," after long wandering and passing through the waters of the abyss meets the dragon, the "king of the worms of the earth, whose tail lies in his mouth. This is the serpent that led astray through passions the angels from on high; this is the serpent that led astray the first Adam and expelled him from Paradise . . . " (Jonas, 1958: 117), (See above § 2.3.7).

[855] The knots (usually odd in numbers) are used in exorcism, to break the spells, or for healing, and the magician had recourse to several options are used as a powerful means to subdue evil. In text 22:213 ff. Hibil says, "I sent against him (the demon) the knot which was above all knots .." (Yamauchi, 1967: 249). In Surah no. 113 of the Qur'an "Muhammad seeks refuge from the "evil of blowers (feminine) upon knots النفاثات في العقد." (Ibid 60) The story tellers say that "a Jew called Lubaid and his daughters bewitched Muhammad by tying eleven knots in a cord which they hid in a well. The result was that the Prophet fell seriously ill and would undoubtedly have died had not God intervened" (Budge, 1930: 62).

[951] ࡔࡉࡁࡉࡀࡄࡉࡀ Lidzbarski translates the word: “planets”, presumably from šaba ahia, “seven brothers” (MII n. 5 p. 254). The Planets are, indeed considered little better than demons since actions swayed by emotions are harmful to the soul, and faults committed under planetary influence must be expiated after death in the maṭarata, realms equivalent to purgatories (Drower, The Coronation of Great Šišlam, 1962: xvi). The planetary deities survived among Mandaeans as forces governing the days of the week. (Budge, 1939: 380) The official Mandaean religion condemns the worship of the old Babylonian planetary deities, even though popular magic has seen fit to invoke their aid, e. g. in the unpublished text (DC 18) “Zrazta d-Šuba Šibiahia” or The Protection of the Seven Planets. We read of the evil designs in the marriage ceremony of the Great Šišlam: “I laughed at the planets, (and) at what they planned and did. I dwelt amongst the Seven (planets) but they laid no hand upon me. For the Elect that loved the Life there shall be good things. Woe to the planets that scheme wickedness against my Chosen Ones” (Drower, Šarh d-Qabin, 1950: 63. Also, Yamauchi, 1967: 32). As for demonizing the planets, Zaehner writes: “The stars proper followed their regular courses and so reflected the divine order: the planets, however, followed eccentric courses and for this reason could not be fitted into that order: hence they must be diabolical” (Zaehner, 1955: 152).

The people of the first prophet, Adam, were the Sabaeans. They identified Melchizedek with Seth and said that at the resurrection he would appear as a judge and as a revealers of the teachings kept secret during history. Melechizedek appeared again during the generations of Noah and Abraham, i.e. at the time of the flood and of Sodom's punishment" (For the conception of ࡌࡀࡅࡋࡀࡍࡀ maulana in the Isma'īlī belief, see Stroumsa 1984: 111).

He assumes that this '"knowledge" is able to blind, subjectand finally destroy its adversaries.' The head represents the seat of prophecy and that the splitting of Rūha's head should mean that the knowledge is designated to the elect and cannot be contained inside the mind of the evil (Lupieri, 2002: 190 n. 17).

[1054] Concerning the old deities of Mesopotamia during the Sasanian dynasty Morony writes: "Several ancient native deities were still venerated in late Sasanian Iraq. Šamiš or Shamash (the sun), Sīn (the Moon), Bel (Jupiter), Nanai and Nergal are all invoked as benevolent powers on a Syriac incantation bowl from Nippur. Bel and Nbu (Mercury) were associated with Babil and were objects of sacrifice at the court of Shāpūr II. . . The great goddess of Mesopotamia had several names during the Sasanian period, but she was also still known by her original name of Nanai (from Sumerian Inanna), 'the great goddess of the entire earth'. The cult of Nanai was originally associated with the regions of Maysan and Babylonia" (Morony, 1984: 386).

[1055] ࡀࡎࡀ Myrtle, which was used for bridal wreaths is mentioned in one of the rare positive appearances of Ishtar on a Mandaic bowl from Khuabir, on which she is invoked by saying, "You will come with this wine and perfume and myrtle" (Yamuchi, 1967: 205-7). Myrtle wreaths are given to Mandaeans by their priests as part of the rite of maṣbūta "baptism" (MII, p. 100).

Lady Drower states: "Magian priests wore myrtle wreaths. Sumerians and Babylonians apparently held foliage before the god for the promotion of fertility" (MII, p. 121-2).

[1079] "The orgiastic feast prepared by world for the seduction of man, or more generally of the alien Life from beyond, is repeatedly described in extensive scenes in Mandaean writings" (Jonas, 1958: 71).

[1080] This is a general Gnostic motif, nevertheless, the Mandaeans abhore celibacy and encourage marriage and have children. According to Jonas, seduction with "love" is the main weapon of the material world with which it entraps man and makes him remain in the world of darkness. (Ibid pp. 72, 3).

Doubtless communities of 'Sons of the Prophets' and the rest had continuously there their retreats. Carmel had been sacred spot long before the days of Elijah, who hid there from his pursuers. The Arabs still call it Jebal Mar Elyas (Mount Lord Elijah). Mead says "Yamblichus in his Life of the sage says that Pythagoras visited it." (Mead, 1924: 47 n. 4) Biblically, Mt. Carmel is referenced most often as a symbol of beauty and fertility. To be given the "splendor of Carmel" was to be blessed indeed (Isa 35: 2). Solomon praised his beloved: "your head crowns you like Mount Carmel" (Song of Songs 7: 5).

may have been temples of Bel and of Nabu at Burs as late as third century. There are references to pagan temples with idols in the late sixth and early seventh centuries in Beth 'Arbhaye, Arzon, Margha, Adiabene, Beth Garme, Kaskar, and Maysan. . . By the fourth century, pagans were already beginning to celebrate their festivals in secret. Such a festival was held in honour of Nabu at his altar in a mountain village near 'Anat and included dancing, raillery, and the playing of the lyre and drums" (Morony, 1984: 384-85).

[1163] Cf. Marduk who bound, by his magic seal, the seven stars and the twelve signs of the zodiacs. (Morony, 1984: 392) Morony also states: "By the end of the Sasanian period, paganism in Iraq was characterized by sacrifice, magic and astrology. The ancient native deities survived and were venerated mainly because of their association with the planets in astrology and with imported Hellenistic and Iranian gods. But even among pagans, the old gods were being relegated to the position of demons. This was probably due to the influence of Gnosticism, which emphasized the harmful aspect of the planets in astral paganism" (Ibid 394).

Abstract:

Sources of the research: The Mandaean holy books and scriptures in addition to old Moslem writers and contemporary western scholars' works.

The purpose of the research:

The research aims to translate the Mandaean Story of Creation, directly from the Mandaean manuscript. Four other Ginza manuscripts from the Oriental and India office at the British Library in London were used to compile a critical apparatus of variants. Book three, or the Book of Creation, is the largest tractate of the Mandaeans' holy book the "Ginza Rba". The Ginza names this tractate as raza usidra qadmaia d̠-šuta haita qadmaita "The Mystery and the First Book of the First Living Doctrine". This tractate includes the cosmogony; the origin of the World of Light and the World of Darkness, the rise of the First Great Life, the Second Life (Yōšamin), the Third Life (Abatur) and the Fourth Life (Ptahil); the Demiurge who created the cosmos and Tibil (the earthly world). It also narrates the creation of the Mandaean redeemer Manda d̠-Hiia ("Gnosis of Life") and his descent to the Underworld and his triumph against the forces of darkness. It narrates the creation of Adam and Eve and the descent of the nišimta (soul) into the ‘ṣṭōna (the human body). Tractate three also includes an elaborate description of the demonic Rūha and her planetary sons and her attempts to seduce Adam in order to entrap him in the world.

The research consists of three parts:

(1) The introduction: The Mandaeans and the Question of Their Origin, The Mandaean system, The Main Characteristic Rituals of the Mandaeans, The Mandaean manuscripts.

(2) Analysis of the narrative: The First Account of the Story of Creation, The Second Account of the Story of Creation, The Third account of the Story of Creation.

(3) The Transcription and Translation of the Manuscript.

Acknowledgments

With my deepest gratitude, I would like to thank everyone who has helped me throughout every aspect of my research, and a special thanks to Wingate Scholarship and their administrator Ms. Faith Clark for their encouragement and financial support. I am especially indebted to Professor Mark Geller of the Hebrew and Jewish Studies Dept at UCL, for his excellent guidance and support during my research.

I would also like to thank the Mandaean Priests Rabi Rafid al-Sabti (Holland), Rabi Salwan Shakir (Sweden) and Yalupa Salim al-Kuhaili (Iran) for their much appreciated help and advice, Dr. Abdul-Atheem al-Sabit (UK), Dr. Qais al-Sadi (Germany), Mr. Carlos Gilbert (Australia), Mr Majid Arabi (Sweden), Mr. Sa‘ad Dehays (U.S.A) and Mr Eli Timan (UK) for their valuable counsel and support. And finally my family who has stood by me patiently and consistently supported my efforts.

§ 1. Introduction

§ 1. Introduction

§ 1.1 - The Mandaeans and the Question of their Origin:

In the hot and marshy areas along the Tigris and Euphrates in the southern Mesopotamia and along the Karun River which flows through the lowland of Iran (Khuzistan) and, like the Tigris and Euphrates, empties into the Shaṭ-al-Arab and then into the Gulf, there dwells a small community of Mandaiia, Mandaeans ("Gnostics"). Their Arab neighbors call them Ṣubba, derived from ࡑࡁࡀ (צבע) "to immerse or submerge", and refers to their frequent baptism "maṣbuta".[1] The Qur'an mentions the al-Ṣab'iūn الصابئون in three sūra along with the Jews and Christians.[2] The Moslem historians called them the Ṣabians [3] of the swamps (صابئة البطائح) or al-Mughtasila (المغتسلة) "those who wash" and they were numerous in the swamps and in the region of Dast-i Maysan.[4] Almas'ūdī tells of a Ṣābian sect called Kīmāriyyūn (الكيماريون) which was located between Wasiţ and Basra. He also reported that the Şabeans were related to Şabi bn Mitšolaẖ bn Idris or Şabi bn Mari at the time of Abraham[5]. Al-Nadim mentioned many baptist sects who were living in southern Iraq such as: the “Dashtim”, the “Muhājirūn”, the “Kašţiūn”, the “Mughtasilah”, the “al-Hasīh” (Elchasites) and “Şābat al-Baţā‘ih”.[6] Macuch asserts that the Mandaeans actually settled in southern Mesopotamia and had many names. In Mesene (Maisan) especially they were called by their proper name “Mandaeans and Maškənaeans” and their script and dialect was called maišānā'it “Messenian” i. e. “Mandaic”.[7]

[1] SA p. ix. Mani points out that he was living amongst the "Sabaios" which is clearly derived form Aramaic sobai which means baptist (Gardner and Lieu, 2004: 65).

But the Arabs wrongly translated "ṣb'" צבע as the Arabic صبا 'to convert' instead of Aramaic "ṣb'" צבע 'to dye' or "submerge". Therefore, Arabic literature still wrongly calls them "those who converted."

Mandaeans who form the greater number of the sect.[10] Although they revered John the Baptist and occasionally mention him in some prayers, their relation to him is still problematic because they consider him "teacher" or "reformer" and never the founder of their faith.[11] In fact there is no mention of a founder of Mandaeism in all their writings.[12] After the Islamic invasion the priestly school which was teaching the esoteric principles of the "Naşiruta" diminished gradually and could no longer fight the new elements of transformation. Eventually, the majority of the Mandaean population had to convert to Islam due to persecution and a heavy poll tax.[13]

No one can determine the first appearance of the Mandaeans in Mesopotamia, and the question of their origin is still one of the continuing mysteries of Mandaeaen research. After nearly two centuries, this issue still raises much controversy amongst scholars. Some, like Nöldeke, Brandt and Lidzbarski, assert a pre-Christian existence to the Mandaeans, others like Pallis prefer a late dating, i. e. 6th century C.E.[14] In fact, Lidzbarski envisaged a Mandaic migration from the Transjordan towards Parthia in the first century even before the destruction of the Jewish kingdom in 70 C.E.[15] Some Arab historians dates the Mandaeans (Ṣabeans) back to the very end of Babylonia, such as al-Birūni (11th century) who wrote, "the Ṣabiyūn are the remnant of the Jewish tribes who remained in the days of Cyrus and Artaxerxes. These remaining tribes adopted a system mixed up of Magianism and Judaism like that of the Samaritans in Syria."[16] Although the Mandaeans believe they are bhiria zidqa "the chosen righteous ones", they admit all nations generated from the Jews: mn ama d̲iahuṭaiia kulhun amamia ubabia minaihun npaq "from the Jews all nations and sects came forth."[17] In addition, the Mandaean scroll "Haran Gawaita" states clearly that the Naṣoraeans had indeed migrated from "Jerusalem" to the ṭaura d̲Mi̲dai "the Median hills" under the protection of the Parthian king "Artabanus":[18]

cult-huts (bimandia) and abode in the Call came to their end.."[19]

The great difficulty in studying Mandaeism is one of chronology. Despite the fact that much has been written about their origin and much speculation, the Mandaeans are the only Gnostic group who call themselves explicitly "Mandaeans" which equals the Greek "gnostikoi". In fact they are the only Gnostic sect which is still in existence. Other Gnostic groups in Egypt, Syria and Palestine vanished, long ago. Many scholars believe that the Mandaeans (Naşoreans), among other "heterodox groups," who flourished in the East were not native movements but rather "migrated there in the hope of escaping the waves of repression that periodically swept the West."[20] It was in Mesopotamia, in contact with the traditions and faiths of Persia, that these Naşoreans adopted dualism and became Mandaeans "Gnostics".[21] Some Mandaean hymns and writings (other than Haran Gawaita) verify their exodus from the West and their arrival at Babylon in the East. The following hymn speaks of a kind of reunion between those Naşorean immigrants (from Jerusalem) and their kinfolks in Babylonia:

> From the home of the great community therein, I became the healer for souls! I became a healer for souls who heals but takes no fee. I set forth, came and reached the gates of Babylon. Of the children of Babylon there were some who shut their doors on seeing me: There were some who shut their doors. And there were those who opened their doors. Those who shut their doors hated Life and loved death and will be held back in the Abode of Darkness. Those who opened their doors loved Life and hated Death, they hated Death and loved Life. They will rise up in purity and will behold the Place of Light.[22]

It seems that the Naşoraeans flourished in Babylonia under the Parthian kingdom and dwelt, like the other Baptist and Gnostic sects (e.g. Elchsaites and Manicheans) in central and southern Babylonia in towns such as Kutha, Borsippa, Nippur[23] and Purat-Maysan.[24] As soon as they settled down they got acquainted with the magic and astrology of the Chaldeans and the astrology of the Babylonians.[25] Hence, they became the soothsayers and "masters" of incantations in Mesopotamia, from whence originated "the most interesting magic formulas in Eastern Aramaic."[26] The Sasanians brought their flourishing to an end when the Zoroastrian state under Shapur I (241-272) began the persecution of "foreign" religions such as Christianity, Judaism, Manichaeism and Gnosticism, and ordered the destruction of many Mandaean temples.[27] Kardir (late 3rd century C.E.),[28] tells us in his inscription at naqsh-i-Rustam how he initiated a religious persecution of great severity throughout the Persian Empire against the other religions such as Manicheans, Jews, kristyānē Christians, nāṣorāyē Naṣoreans etc.[29] This inscription can be taken as a solid evidence of the existence of the Mandaeans in Mesopotamia, along with other Baptist/Gnostic sects at that time in Sasanian Iraq. In this respect Quispel writes: "The Mandaean problem has become an open question again since Torgny Säve Söderbergh has shown that the Manichaean Psalms of Thomas were based upon extant Mandaean hymns, thus proving that the Mandaean sect in Iraq must had a very long prehistory."[30]

In the sixteenth century, the Mandaeans of Iraq and Iran came to the attention of the Western world through the Jesuit missionaries, who accompanied the Portuguese armada in the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf, and came into contact with the Mandaeans in and about Basra and in Khuzistan.[31] The Jesuits thought that they discovered the "heretical Christians of St. John," but to the disappointment of the monks they could not convince the Mandaeans, except for a few, to join the Christian faith. But they succeeded in recruiting some of them as mercenaries and interpreters who sailed with the Portuguese fleet to the Strait of Hormuz, Masqat, Goa, Ceylon and even to Portugal itself.[32] When the Portuguese witnessed the persecution of the Mandaeans at the hands of the Moslems,[33] the Portuguese reached an agreement with the Pasha of Basra to move the Mandaeans to the Christian lands, but the Pasha went back on his word and did not allow the Mandaeans to leave and the exodus came to a halt.[34]

Conclusion:

According to the Mandaean manuscript "Haran Gawaita"[35] and other historical records, distinguished Semitic scholars, such as Lidsbarski, contented that Mandaism (literature and cult) is influenced strongly by the Old Testament and can only have originated in Jewish circles.[36] We might, therefore, conclude that the Naṣoraeans were either a heterodox Jewish sect or the followers of John the Baptist, who did not convert to Christianity, and they fled to the east before the fall of Jerusalem in C.E. 70 because they were persecuted by the Jews.[37] Having first settled in northern Mesopotamia (Haran),[38] they moved to the Median hills of old Parthia and finally settled in Babylon and southern Mesopotamia, where they still live. This migration might explain the cultural influences of Judaism, Christianity, Zoroastrianism and the old Babylonian religion on the Mandaean writings.

According to their belief, the Mana Rba "the Great Mana" (Intelligence), who dominates the World of Light, issued Hiia Qadmiia "the First Life" from the great yardina "Jordan" of Life. In turn, the First Life submitted a request to himself and created a son of his own whom he called Hiia Taniania "the Second Life" or "Yōšamin". The Second Life became [37] The Mandaeans always define themselves as the followers of John the Baptist (Yahia Yuhana) in Jerusalem (SA, p. vi). According to Josephus, John the Baptist had "an astonishingly persuasive power over the Jewish populace" (Mead, 1924: 4).

[38] For the Mandaean polemic toward Christians, see Drower "Mandaean Polemic", BSOAS, (1962) pp. 438-48, esp. pp. 439-440, which might allude to their reason for moving from Haran.

infatuated with the idea of creating a world of his own. He, therefore, transferred his defecting tendency to his son Abatur "the Third Life". Abatur opened the gate of the World of Light, and as soon he gazed into the abyss (or: darkness) Ptahil "the Fourth Life", came into being. Ptahil, who received a mandate from his father Abatur, descended to the black waters, consolidated arqa "the earth" and created the material world. On the other hand, the Lord of Darkness created a kingdom for himself with demonic beings of monsters, dragons, evil spirits and most of all the "Seven" (planets), and the "Twelve" (signs of the Zodiac) and their mother, the goddess of Darkness "Rūha". As a counter move, the World of Light created Manda ḏ-Hiia "Gnosis of Life"[40] in order to put an end to the defection of the uthras "beings of the World of Light" and to conquer the evil forces of the World of Darkness.

Ptahil, with the assistance of Rūha and her entourage, tried to create Adam but they could not succeed to make him stand on his feet. Therefore, Ptahil went back to the World of Light and brought from his father the nišimta "soul" and cast it into Adam's body. Only then Adam stood on his feet and became aware of his existence. The core of the Mandaean's soteriology is the deliverance of the nišimta "soul" from the perishable body. When death occurs the soul leaves the body and begins a long journey through the maṭaratia "watch-houses" or "purgatories" before reaching its final destination; alma ḏnhura "the World of Light".

[40] Manda ḏ-Hiia: Gnosis of Life and the Mandaean Redeemer (See below §2.3.2).

There are minor resemblances between the Mandaean story of creation and the Babylonian one such as the creation of the savior and his fight against the forces of evil. These resemblances led scholars, such as Brandt, to believe that Mandaeism is an off-shoot of the late Babylonian religion; he even assumed that Mandaeism was the centre from which the Ophite [41] and similar Gnostic system issued. [42] Lady Drower dedicated the introduction of her book "Secret Adam" to the Naşoraeans and their exodus from Palestine, which she dates to just after the destruction of the 2nd temple. She also discusses their possible relationship with Jewish-Palestinian groups.[43]

§ 1.3 - Mandaism and Gnosticism:

In addition to the resemblances between Mandaeism and the Babylonian religion, we find striking parallels between the Mandaic Gnostic motifs and the motifs of the other Gnostic sects such as the Hermetists and the Valentinians especially in the area of the redeemer and the ascent of the soul.[44] Gnosticism, the most problematic of cults, is first clearly attested in the second century C.E., but its exact origin is still of great controversy among scholars.[45] It gathered momentum in the following century and spread to [44] Jonas writes, "The celestial journey of the returning soul is indeed one of the most constant common features in otherwise widely divergent systems, and its significance for the gnostic mind is enhanced by the fact that it represents a belief not only essential in gnostic theory and expectation, and expressive of the conception of man's relation to the world, but of immediate practical importance to the Gnostic believer, since the meaning of gnosis is to prepare for this final event, and all its ethical, ritual, and technical instruction is meant to secure its successful completion" (Jonas 1958: 165).

[45] Godwin, J., 1981: 84. Rudolph points out that "The beginning and end of Gnosis in late antiquity cannot be pin-pointed exactly. It makes appearance at the beginning of the Christian

Egypt and to the Fertile Crescent.[46] Some contemporary scholars, such as Quispel, believe that Gnosticism is neither the product of the Greek philosophy nor "a fossilized survival of old Iranian or even Indian religious concept."[47]

According to the Mandaean manuscript Haran Gawaita Mandaeism "Naṣoraeanism" struck roots in Mesopotamia when a tendency to relegate the gods of the old religions and to adopt the Persian dualism at the dawn of the first millennium when the country was under the Parthian-Sasanian dominion.[48] Mandaeism and other baptist gnostic-type movements must have been around much at that time.[49] Some hypotheses say that the Naṣoreans, who settled in East Jordan, became under the persecution of both the Jews and Christians, and for that reason they sought refuge in a friendlier atmosphere of Parthia and Media hills and from there they moved down to Babylon and southern Mesopotamia.[50] Naṣoreaanism preserved the old Gnostic tenet that the world is created by foolish creator or demiurge, who himself came into being as a result of an error and that the soul is a "spark" from the World of Light has to be redeemed and sent back to its origin, along with many indications of syncretistic Judaism. Many distinguished scholars[51] conclude that Naṣoraeanism (Mandaeism) is a heretical Jewish sect and its members are the "ultimate descendant of the Palestinian baptists of New Testament times and the period immediately preceding."[52] The divorce between this sect and official Judaism perhaps took place during the first and the second centuries C.E.[53] This defection of the Naṣoraeans from Judaism is documented in one of the rarest Mandaean passages which is connected with the consecration of a priest:

> And then he spoke and taught about the man who becomes a priest on earth and who leaves lay life for priesthood, like the soul which quits Judaism for Mandaeaism. For before it is baptized an infant dwells in an abode of Judaism, and a guardian-spirit of Light sits beside it (lit: sits on its neck) guarding it and awaiting its delivery from the snares of the Jews.[54]

[51] Such as: Rudolph 1983: 362, he also writes: "in the context of the Jewish wars of independence and the growing consolidation of Judaism after the destruction of Jerusalem (A.D. 70), its position in opposition evidently led to persecutions of the community and ultimately to its emigration from the Jordan territory to the east." Drower states: "there is often a polemical interchange of (ṭ) with (d) when scribes refer to Jews. Here either could be meant, as the two letters frequently replace one another. (In Ginza Rba Judaism is yahduta.) The polemical world-play on YHṬ and YHD is commented on by Lidzbarski (ATŠ, p. 255 n. 8).

The following text is another significant clue which may suggest that Mandaeism was a heterodox Jewish sect who chose to adopt Gnosticism "Mandaeism":

> He said to them: "The first kušṭa (oath) is a precious kušṭa; it is the promise made at baptism which takes the soul out of its yahuṭuth ('Judaism') into Mandaeism."[55]

The Mandaean tale of Miriai, the Jewish princess who left her religion and joined the Mandaeans, also shows a possible connection between the earliest Mandaeans and Jewish sectarians of the Second Temple period.[56] Other Mandaean writings from the Ginza such as the eleventh book of the Right Ginza "the Mystery book of Great Anoš (Enosh)" and book twelve, identifying the speaker as the "great Anoš", possess discernible links with the antique Judaism.[57]

The evolution of Mandaeism was summed up by H. –M. Shenke in three points: (1) originally the Mandaens were a heretical Jewish baptismal sect, one among many. (2) The Mandaeans then accepted a Gnostic view. (3) This gnosis was finally institutionalized.[58]

[56] Zalcman, 1991: 421.

[57] Reeves, 1996: 143. Concerning the history of the Mandaean textual corpus he stated: "If a clear connection can be established between the Codex "apocalypse" passage and Mandaean Enosh material, an important step would be taken toward an improved understanding of the religio-historical relationship linking a number of Syrio-Mesopotamian religious communities" (Ibid, pp. 143-4). Reeves also adds: "The amazingly close correspondence in language between the Codex passage and the Mandaean texts is extraordinary, bolstering the growing suspicion that they derive from a common textual corpus" (Ibid, p. 147). On the other hand the Mandaeans accused the Jews of not observing the laws of impurity at all. (GRR, book XI. See also Lidzbarski, Ginza, pp. 224-5 where Kiwan "Saturn" is the god of the Jews).

We may outline the main parallel and different features of the Mandaean Gnostic system and the general Gnostic system according to the following table:

§ 1.3.1 - General Parallels and Differences between Gnosticism and Mandaeanism:

Gnosticism	Mandaeanism
1. The Gnostic system is based upon the dualistic opposition between the transcendental world of the "fullness" (pleroma) embracing the High God and the Aeons, his inferior emanations, on the one hand, and, on the other, the "emptiness" (kenoma), the planetary and terrestrial world inhabited by man.	1. The Gnostic system of the Mandaeans is based upon the opposition between the transcendental (nukraiia) world of Light embracing hiia rbia qadmaiia "the First Great Life" (or: the King of Light) and the uthras, his inferior emanations, on the one hand, and, on the other, the world of Darkness, the Seven planets (šibiahia) and terrestrial world (tibil) inhabited by man.
2. The kenoma came about because of some crisis in the pleroma, whereby the lowest of the Aeons on the emanation scale, a female figure	2. The physical world came about because of the crises caused by the Second Life "Yōšamin" and his sons the uthras when they decided to create a known variously as Wisdom (Sophia) or Thought (Enonoia) lapsed out of the pleroma, and in her confusion and dissatisfaction, she produced the angel archons, generally seven in number, who created and then ruled the world.	world of their own without consulting the higher deity, the First Life. Abatur (the Third Life) lapsed out of the world of Light, and in his confusion and dissatisfaction, produced Ptahil (the Fourth Life). Ptahil created the world with the help of Rūha and her sons the Seven planets who ruled the world.

3. The spark or spirit (pneuma) of the divine pleroma which fell into man must be regained and restored to its rightful place on high.	3. The soul nišimta or mana which fell into man must be regained and restored to its rightful place; the World of Light.
4. An Aeon (Jesus) is sent down to redeem the innermost part of every man's pneuma through suffering.	4. The messenger Manda d̲-Hiia (Gnosis of Life) or Enosh-Uthra is sent down to lead the nišimta (soul) to its final destination through gnosis "knowledge" and "awakening."
5. Gnosticism is optimistic towards the destiny of man and pessimistic towards the universe.[59]	5. Mandaeanism is optimistic towards the destiny of the nišimta (soul) of man and pessimistic towards the physical world "Tibil".

§ 1.4 - The Main Characteristic Rituals of the Mandaeans:

> "The great importance which the Mandaeans attribute to their cult practices shows their special character even more clearly. It is not "knowledge" alone that redeems but the cultic rites, primarily baptism and the "mass for the dead", are necessary for salvation."[60]

§ 1.4.1 - ࡌࡀࡑࡁࡅࡕࡀ Maşbuta (Baptism)

The central cultic rite of the Mandaeans is baptism or "immersion" ࡌࡀࡑࡁࡅࡕࡀ (maşbuta, pronounced maşwatta). It is the immersion in the fluid of Life which gives the promise of eternal life to the nišimta "soul".[61] The rite of baptism had the esoteric significance of an initiation into the mystery of gnosis. To the Mandaean water is the medium which most fully expresses the mystery of being, or of the Being which is semi personified as the 'Great Life', and a river is the equivalent of the heavenly 'Jordan' flowing in the world of light:[62] Thus ࡌࡉࡀ mia "water" originates in (Life) and conversely ࡄࡉࡉࡀ hiia "Life" originates in water. By performing baptism in the yardina "river" the Mandaean enters a into laupa "union" with the World of Light. Thus, the

Mandaean is protected from the powers of death, purified from pollution and defilement and also receives forgiveness for his transgression.[63]

In addition to the immersion in the running water, the full baptism includes the sacrament of oil, bread, and water, the hand-grasp and kiss called 'giving kušṭa'[64] and the final blessing by laying the right hand of the priest on the head of the baptized person. Besides the full baptism there are two lesser water rites which are performed without priestly assistance:

1. rišama: prayers recited daily, with covered head, just before sunrise; after evacuation of the bowels. At this stage no priest is needed.
2. ṭamaša: the second ablution is a triple complete immersion in the river, also performed without ministration of a priest. It must be performed immediately after any kind of pollution (coition, nocturnal pollution, touching an unclean person) and after any serious defilement such as touching the body of a dead person. It must be also performed by a woman after menstruation and after child birth.[65]

Some scholars believe that certain roots of the Mandaean baptism is related to the Jewish rule such the prohibition of baptism and other rites on the Sabbath and on the mbaṭṭal (inauspicious) days.[66] But repeated baptism was a common feature among the different gnositc sects of Babylonia such as the Elchasaites who were attacked by Mani for their daily baths.[67] The Mandaean baptism is unique of its kind and did not come into being as a reproduction of the Christian-Syrian, especially Neşţorian rite. "In fact it is possible that certain characters go back to a pre-Christian period and have their origin in the lustral and baptismal practice of unorthodox Judaism, i.e. in the so-called baptismal sects (Maşboteans, Şebueans, cf. Şābeans)."[68] Other Gnostics such as the Ebionites and Hemerobaptists also performed repeated baptism.[69]

(b) The act of placing the right hand in that of another person in token of and ratification of a pact, oath or promise. This act is concluded by a kiss, each of the two persons kissing his own right hand when the hand is released. (c) A being, a personification of truth and good faith (ATŠ, p. 12).

The pliability of the research in the field of Mandaeism is always ambushed by the ambiguity of some terms and characters.[70] In baptism we are faced with an indefinite personality of bihram rba "Bihram the Great" as we read in the following baptismal formula:

> "I have baptized myself with the baptism of Bahram the Great, son of the Mighty Ones. My baptism shall protect me and attain the end (or: be successful). The name of Life and the name of Manda ḏ-Hiia be pronounced on me."[71]

[67] For Mani's confrontation with the baptists see Henrichs, 1973: 43. In respect of the ritual immersion in Babylonia, Drower writes: "Ritual immersion was ancient indeed in Babylonia, and during Iranian domination shrines had been built on the Tigris and Euphrates to the water-goddess Anahita, who under her Semitic name Nanai or Nanaia is still invoked in Mandaean exorcism books" (SA, pp. 104-5).

Bihram, as it seems, is the core of the ritual, but he does not play any significant role in the Mandaean mythology. It is obvious that Bihram is a Persian name associated with some Persian kings,[72] and with the Persian god Bahram or Vahram.[73] We have no evidence, whatsoever, to prove that the Bihram mentioned at the Mandaean baptism is a human being who established the sect, as implied by some. Others, like Segelberg, hypothesized that when the Mandaens settled in the East during the Sassanian period they replaced the name of Yohana "John the Baptist" with Bihram in order to legitimize the new religion to the rulers of the country.[74]

In addition to the main baptism, which is performed in every religious event including marriage, the Mandaeans perform a minor ablution (baptism) to the dying person. After the priest performs rišama "the minor ablution", the mortally ill person is dressed in his rasta (ritual dress), and a small myrtle wreath is inserted in the little finger of his right hand and he is watched carefully day and night so that he not die unclean. At the end of the rišama the priest recites some prayers, while some members of the dying person's family bring water from the river. When death approaches, the dying person is undressed and doused three times from head to foot. They lift him and place him on clean bedding facing the North Star.[75] Then they cloth him in a new rasta and wait for his nišimta (soul) to depart his body. [76] In the past other Gnostic sects such as the Valentinians and the Marconsians used to perform this kind of baptism for their dying people.[77]

[72] Bihram I, Bihram, Birhram III and Bahram IV (Zaehner, 1955: 38 ff).

[73] About this ambiguous figure, which is closely associated with the Mandaean baptism, Drower writes: "His name is Iranian (Avestan Vəδəθaγna) and the Mandaean Bihram may be the Persian genius of victory (New Persian Bahrām < Middle Persian Varhrān) . . The presence of the banner at Mandaean baptism may be connected with Bihram's banner of victory" (SA p. 65). Vahram or Baharam (Verethraghna), the yazata "is the Persian god of the planets and victory who was created by Ahura and became the great champion against demons" (Boyce, 1975: 54, see also Zaehner, 1955: 220). Lupieri suggests that the Mandaeans who lived in Characene since the second century must have chosen Bihram (the deity of Maisan) as eponymous deity of their baptism (Lupieri, 2002: 163 f.).

[74] Segelberg, 1955: 57 ff. At any account this subject needs further research.

§ 1.4.2 - ࡌࡀࡎࡉࡒࡕࡀ The Masiqta (Ascent of the Soul)

The Masiqta is the second major ceremony of the Mandaeans and it, too, includes immersion in "Jordan" (river, running water), anointing with oil and crowning with the myrtle wreath. It is the Naşoraean mass dedicated to those who die "unclean" without the proper ceremony of the dead. The Mandaean has to die clean wearing his white ceremonial outfit in order to join his heavenly dmuta "image, counterpart": "I go to meet my image and my image comes to me: it caresses and embraces me as if I were returning from captivity."[78] The Mandaeans believe that a man who dies in a violent death suffers long and painful delay in the maṭaratia (watch-houses) before moving into the next world. Therefore, a masiqta "ascension" ceremony has to be performed three days after the death of the believer in order to assist nišimta "the soul", by furnishing it with a new body, with which it could enter the World of Light.[79] For the Mandaeans the fate of the nišimta is the main concern, because pagra "the body" cannot rise to the world of Light and eventually integrates back into the earth.[80]

The masiqta is a long ceremony, which requires the presence of, at least, three priests: a ganzibra[81] "head-priest", a tarmida "priest" and a šganda "assistant". The preparations for this ceremony start on Saturdays only and the main ritual takes place on Sunday.[82] The main ingredients of masiqta "ascension" are the recitation of certain prayers from the Left Ginza, and a sacramental meal. The meal includes unleaved bread, [83] different kind of fruit and nuts, fish, and a tiny piece of sacrificed white dove-flesh (ba).[84] There must be fresh myrtle and a large bowl of water just filled from the yardina "river".[85] The recitations are continued at fixed intervals until the end of the forty-five days' journey of the soul.[86] There are at least nine major variants of the Mandaean masiqta:

1. The Bukra: the first masiqta performed by a priest after ordination. 2. The masiqta of newly-consecrated ganzabra. 3. The Dabahata or Ṭabahata:

The masiqta of Adam: for one who has died on one of the major mbaṭṭal days, such as New Year's Day. 7. The masiqta of Samandri'il: for a person who has died of burns, or has fallen from a tree or been drowned. 8. The masiqta of kanat: for a woman who dies during pregnancy. 9. masiqta of hai-šūm: for a person who died as a result of a snake bite. There are other masiqta for a bride-groom who died during wedding ceremonies and for moving the remains of a dead person.[87]

While the masiqta is intended essentially for the dead, it is also applied to living. A masiqta is performed in the ceremony of initiating a new priest. The ašualia "novice for priesthood" dedicates a masiqta to his rabi "teacher" and pronounces his name at a certain point in the ritual where the name of officiating priest has to be indicated.

§ 1.5 - The Mandaean Calendar

The Mandaeans have a lunar year, which is divided into twelve months of thirty days each, with five intercalary days named Parwanaiia,[88] which fall between Sumbulta "Virgo", the 8th month, and Qaina "Libra" (Tišrin), the 9th month. The beginning of the "Panja" festival changes depending upon the movements of lunar months in the year.[89] The Mandaean calendar is a 365-day calendar consisting of twelve 30-day months, with 5 epagomenals inserted at the end of the 8th month. This compensation takes place during the Parwanaiia (or: Panaja = five days) which is celebrated by the Mandaeans during the five intercalary days between the end of the month Šumbulta (Ellul) and the beginning of Qaina (Tišrin).[90]

During the five days preceding, no religious ceremony except a funeral may be performed, and no undertaking of importance should be begun, for these are considered to be "days of darkness".[91] They are followed by the five intercalary days mentioned above, called "days of light". Mandaeans are forbidden to pray after sunset at other times of the year, but during the nights of Parwanaiia darkness is considered non-existent, and praise and prayer flow continually. Barriers between this world and the world of Light are down.

The Mandaeans believe that in the five days of the Parwanaiia (Panja) five celestial beings of Light were created, and that consequently the doors of the world of Light are open during these five days. The beings of light are:

[89] The term Panja means the five Gatha days, also called Khamsat al-mustariqat, was used in the Persian as well as in the Sistanian calendars during the 5th century (See Taqizadeh, "The Old Iranian Calendar again", BSOAS, Vol. 14, No. 3, (1952), pp. 603-611, esp. p. 608).

[90] The old Iranian calendar (of 12 months of 30 days and 5 supplementary days) are still in use in many districts of Kashan, Natanz, Maima, Javshagan, and the in the province of Yazd. (Ibid, 610).

[91] The Mandaeans think the five days preceding intercalary days particularly ominous, because they are dedicated to the evil spirits of death and darkness.

Marad-Rabuta, Manda ḏ-Hiia, Šišlam-Rba, Adam-Shaq and Hibil-Ziwa.[92] Although this calendar could have been borrowed from the Zoroastrians at any time in the early Middle Ages, further characteristics of the Mandaean calendar suggest earlier origins that would pre-date the Middle Ages, the Sassanians, and even Mandaeism itself. The twelve months of the Mandaean year grouped and named according to four seasons (e.g. the first month of the year is called awal sitwa, "first of the winter") but also bear Babylonian (Aramaic) names of months. The month Nisan designates the 3rd month of the year, exactly as in the Sogdian calendar, but incongruously since Nisanu is the 1st month of the Babylonian year.

The twelve months of the Mandaean year are divided into four seasonal divisions: Sitwa (winter), Abhar (spring), Giṭa (summer), and Paiz (autumn). The months are also named according to the signs of the Zodiac: Daula "Aquarius" (Šabat), Nuna "Pisces" (Adar), Ambra "Aries" (Nisan), Taura "Taurus" (Ayar), Ṣilmia "Gemini" (Siwan), Ṣirṭana "Cancer" (Tammuz), Arya "Leo" (Ab) Šumbulta "Virgo" (Ellul), Qaina "Libra" (Tišrin), Arqba "Scorpio" (Mašrwan), Haṭia "Sagittarius" (Kanun), Gadia "Capricon" (Ṭabit). Each year is named after the day which it began, e.g. the Year of Habšaba, the Year of Sunday; or Year of Rahaṭia, Year of Friday. The Mandaean New Year is called Dihba Rba.[93] The Mandaeans count the 24 hours of a day and night as beginning at dawn, i.e. Tuesday is followed by Tuesday night: "the night of Tuesday" to an Arab, on the contrary, means the night preceding Tuesday.

[93] See MII, pp. 84-5.

The Mandaean calendar has the additional incongruity of beginning the year with the winter season, whereas the Persian-Zoroastrian New Year is normally associated with the spring. The Persian-Zoroastrian New Year coincided with early winter in the 1st century B.C.E., so the essential names of Mandaean months may have been instituted in this period.[94] The Mandaeans are the only non-Iranian people who adopted the old Iranian calendar, along with quite a number of other beliefs, of the later Sasanian period i.e., the time of Khosrau the Great (sixth century) without the slightest change.[95] But the Mandaeans did not use the Persian names of the months and kept the Semitic ones, as mentioned above.

The main purpose of the Mandaean calendar is to determine the ominous and auspicious times. The Mandaeans believe in two kinds of ominous (mbaṭṭal) days: (1) Minor mbaṭṭal "ominous": on these days the Mandaeans are not allowed to slaughter animals, but are allowed to eat meat of slaughtered animals on the day before. (2) Major mbaṭṭal "ominous": Slaughter of animals or eating meat is not allowed during these days; only vegetarian food.[96]

§1.6 - Mandaean Feasts

§1.6.1 - ࡐࡀࡓࡅࡀࡍࡀࡉࡉࡀ Parwanaiia (Panja)

As mentioned above, the most important of the Mandaean's feasts is the Parwanaiia[97] (or: Panja) which is celebrated during the five intercalary days between the end of the month Šumbulta (Ellul) and the beginning of Qaina (Tišrin). Five days before the Panja, or the last five days of Šumbulta, are considered major mbaṭṭl (ominous days), for they are dedicated to the five lords of Darkness, but the period Panja is the happiest time of the whole year. As noted above, the Mandaean year is divided into twelve months of thirty days each and a month with five intercalary days. These five days are called Parwanaiia and the Mandaeans believe that in the five days of the Parwanaiia (Panja) five celestial beings of Light were created, and that consequently the doors of the world of Light are open during these five days. Those ࡍࡐࡀࡒࡀ nfaqa "out of the body" (dead), are with their loved ones and share in communion (laufa) with them ritual meals eaten in their names. The five days of the Parwanaiia are called hamša iuma ḏparuaniia ḏhinun dukrana "the five days commemoration".[98] The perfected souls of ancestors and spirits of life and light have special powers at this time to help the living. Should a person have the food fortune to die during the sacred five days, he or she will pass quickly through the purgatories (or: watch-houses) to the world of light. On the last day of the feast, special ceremonies are performed by the priests for those who, during the past year, died in a state of impurity, or not wearing ritual garment. Sheep are slaughtered for lay feasting and charity, and a small piece of sheep's fat is placed on zidqa brika (Holy Oblation) tables. Every man, woman and child should be baptized and all share in sacraments which commemorate the dead.[99]

§1.6. 2 - ࡃࡉࡄࡁࡀ ࡓࡁࡀ Dihba Rba

Dihba Rba is the Mandaeans' New Year festival, celebrated at the beginning of Daula (Šabat), the first month of the Mandaean year. They also use the Persian name Nauruz Rba for this festival. New Year's Eve is called Kanši uZahli "cleaning and lustration". On this day sheep and chicken are slaughtered, bread is baked and kept in the house, jars and pots are filled with water enough for thirty-six hours. All day, till sunset (paina ḏ-Dahba Rba), the priests baptize the faithful. Thirty-six hours before the second day of Daula (Šabat), i.e. the night before the New Year and the first of the New Year, is called the Day-of-Lacking, during which period priests and laymen retire into the house, where they must remain without going outside, no matter for what purpose, and no religious ceremony can take place. The reason given for these precautions against pollution is this: For the Mandaeans, the New Year honors Mana Rba Kabira and how he completed his work of Creation. On this day, the spirits of light gather together to embark on a twelve hour journey to visit the Great Mana and show their appreciation towards him. Abatur closes his door, Nidbai and Šilmai forsake their posts as the guardians of running waters; Hibil, Šitil, and Anuš depart; the dwellers in Mšunia Kušṭa (the parallel pure world) with Adam Kasia (Secret Adam) at their head and their guardian spirit Šišlam Rba (the dmuta of Hibil-Ziwa) all rise into the infinite worlds of light. They travel by the "vehicles of Light" and this celestial journey takes them twelve hours. They reach the realm of Light at the dawn of the New Year and spend the next twelve hours praying and praising the Great Ones. Their journey back covers the next night.

[99] Drower, Water into Wine, 1956: 37-8.

While the guardians are gone, the world is left defenseless and all sources of nature, including trees and rives, become exposed to the forces of evil and death. Therefore, the Mandaeans take extra measures to protect themselves from pollution by staying at home praying and meditating for thirty-six hours. On the third day of the feast (the second day of the new year) the invisible guardians having returned, the vigil is over and there is a general jubilation. The Mandaeans gather in the mandi "temple" to greet the ganzibra "high-priest", and listen to his portents for the year. Then they go to visit Mandaean families that have recently lost a loved one to console them and assure them that they are not alone in times of difficultly. Once this is done, they feast and make merry.[100]

§1.6.3 - ࡃࡉࡄࡁࡀ ࡃࡔࡉࡔࡋࡀࡌ ࡓࡁࡀ (ࡃࡉࡄࡁࡀ ࡃࡔࡅࡔࡉࡀࡍ) The Dihba d- Šišlam Rba or the Dihba d-Šušian

The Mandaeans also call this feast Nauruz Zūṭa (Little New Year) which takes place on the 6th day and the 7th of the first month. The night between these two days is called "the night of power"[101] and then, if a man is pious, the gate of Abatur is opened for him in a vision and he obtains whatever he may ask. However, if he is really pious he does not ask worldly favours but freedom from sin and spiritual gifts, and the result is not immediately seen. The priests visit the Mandaean families and hang on the door of every house a wreath of willow and myrtle, which remains there till the next year and is thought to protect the Mandaeans from evil. In return, the Mandaeans donate a small fee to the priests.

§1.6.4 - ࡃࡉࡄࡁࡀ ࡄࡍࡉࡍࡀ The Dihba Hnina or Dihba Ṭurma (the little feast)

This feast takes place on the 18th of Taura (Ayar) and lasts for three days. Baptism should take place and the dead be remembered by lofani or ritual meals. Dihba Hnina celebrates the return of Hibil-Ziwa form the underworlds to the worlds of light. It is a cheerful feast and commemorates creation. Hibil-Ziwa's marriage to Zahariel (the female spirit of the underworld) results in the birth of Ptahil (the demiurge who created the cosmos). On the first day of this feast they visit each other and have a special breakfast together which consists of rice, yogurt and dates.

[101] The Moslems celebrate a similar occasion on the night of the 27th of the fasting month "Ramadan" which they call lailat elqadr "the Night of Power". They believe the gate of heavens open in this night and some of the believers' wishes come true.

§ 1.7 - ࡋࡅࡈࡀࡕࡀ ࡅࡒࡉࡓࡉࡀࡕࡀ luṭata uqiriata Curses and Incantations

A large number of Mandaic magic bowls, lead and gold amulets were found in Mesopotamia during the 19th and 20th century, and have reached the Western world through archeologists and antique dealers. We cannot determine a dating for this magic material but most scholars believe that they belong to period between the 2nd and the 6th century C.E. The writings on the terracotta magic bowls survived because they were written with a special kind of "permanent" ink. The ink diuta ࡃࡉࡅࡕࡀ is made, according to a secret recipe, by the scribes themselves, who are often the priests.[102] To the Mandaeans writing is a sacred art and the letters of the alphabet represent the powers of life and of light. Hence, Mandaeans look upon their alphabet as magical and sacred. Writing is under the special protection of the planet Nabû[103]. Letters of the alphabet, inscribed on twenty-four scraps of silver or gold, are placed under the pillow of a person who desires heavenly guidance in some matter of difficulty.[104]

[102] The following recipe was given to Drower by a Mandaean priest during her stay in Iraq: "Mix glue with river water, let it melt, and then evaporated for six days. On the seventh, pound it with powder charcoal in the portion of one mithqal (nearly 4.8 gm)of charcoal to 25 glue, for four or five days. Mix with water to a smooth paste, and after evaporation it will form crystals. These, mixed with river-water (yardina) to from ink. The Asut Malka (a prayer recited before all baptisms and ritual meals, and rites) should be read over it" (MII p. 23).

[103] Nbû or 'Nbû in Mandaean (Babylonian Nabû 'Mercury'). The Mandaeans, like the Babylonians, consider him as the patron of writing and the god of wisdom (MD, p. 287, see also Dally, 1989: 325).

The bowls contain valuable information of mythical tales of Late Antiquity including early forms of liturgy, mystical literature and Mandaean textual material.[105] They also reflect the Mandaean belief and creed.[106] The purpose of these magic bowls and rolls is to throw a protective spell against enemies, capture demons, and repulse curses and avert evil eye, over the clients for whom they were written. Incantations were of various kinds and shapes; some were for health and others as love talismans.[107] The Mandaeans possessed a large collection of charms and magical prescriptions, and when written down they formed a real "Book of Magic". The most famous "magic" book is Asfar Malwāšā (Book of the Zodiac) which deals with a system of astrology based on the Signs of the Zodiac based on astrological literature of the Babylonians.[108]

The magic roll is of two kinds. The larger is not easily carried on the person. It is usually called a ࡒࡌࡀࡄࡀ qmaha. The smaller, for which the word ࡆࡓࡀࡆࡕࡀ zrazta is usual though not invariable, is written minutely on a long strip of paper from 2 – 3 inches wide, tightly rolled and inserted into a small gold or silver case so tat it may be suspended round the neck from a string or chain. The astrological name of the person for whose protection the roll has been written recurs throughout together with invocations of the powers of light and life for himself, his family, his possessions, and his trade.[109]

The Mandaeans, like the Babylonians, lived lives of fear because they believed in the existence of myriads of fiends and devils which caused sickness and death to themselves and damage to their material property.[110] The phantoms of ghosts of dead men were greatly feared in Babylonia, even more so than among the Mandaeans. It was necessary for the living to offer food, perform rituals, and recite incantations in order to propitiate potentially vengeful ghosts, who were as often as not their relatives.[111] The people clung to the use of amulets and the art of incantations thrived in Mesopotamia. The Mandaeans became the masters of this art, and the originators of the most interesting magic formulas in Eastern Aramaic.[112]

The official Mandaean religion condemns the worship of the old Babylonian planetary deities, even though popular magic has seen fit to invoke their aid. The Seven (planets) and the Twelve (signs of the Zodiac), mentioned in many of the holy writings, may be treated as allies and friends. Pašra d̠-Šambra (a love charm) addressed to Libat (Dilbat, Ištar) which begins frankly, "In the name of Libat, mistress of gods and men". Antagonistic references to the planets and signs of the Zodiac also appear, sometimes in same phylactery.[113] The planets are considered little better than demons since actions swayed by emotion are harmful to the soul, and fault committed under planetary influence must be expiated after death in the ࡌࡀࡈࡀࡓࡀࡕࡀ matarata (s. matarta ࡌࡀࡈࡀࡓࡕࡀ), realms equivalent to purgatories. The Mandaean view is that after death the soul has to pass through a number of posts of stations, matarata, before it reaches the scales of judgement. Matarata serve as places of purification for the soul proceeding towards the Realm of Light, and each is in charge of a keeper or keepers.[114]

Many of the divine figures and demons are mentioned in the Ginza are invoked in the Mandaean incantations and amulets, such as: ࡄࡉࡉࡀ 'the Life', ࡌࡀࡍࡃࡀ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ manda d-hiia 'the gnosis of Life', ࡄࡉࡁࡉࡋ "Hibil", ࡉࡀࡅࡀࡓ "Yawar", ࡔࡉࡁࡉࡀࡄࡉࡀ "the (Seven) Planets", ࡉࡅࡔࡀࡌࡉࡍ "Yōšamin", ࡐࡕࡀࡄࡉࡋ "Ptahil", ࡂࡀࡁࡓࡉࡀࡋ Gabriel, ࡔࡀࡌࡉࡔ Šamiš, ࡊࡉࡅࡀࡍ "Kiwan" ࡁࡉࡋ "Bel" ࡍࡁࡅ "Nabu" or "Nbu" ࡍࡉࡓࡉࡂ "Nirig" or "Nergal" ࡋࡉࡋࡉࡕ "Lilith", ࡃࡉࡅࡉ "Dewis" ࡐࡕࡀࡊࡓࡉࡀ "Idol-spirits" ࡓࡅࡄࡀ "Rūha" ࡋࡉࡁࡀࡕ "Stira" (Ištar) "Venus-Libat" ࡀࡃࡅࡍࡀࡉ "Adonai" etc. These names and more are also found in the other chapters of the Ginza and in the other Mandaean texts.

In 1905 Mark Lidzbarski published a lead amulet which he dated about 400 C.E. It is considered the earliest of all Mandaic writings. The writing was inscribed with a nail, and the letters are very small.[115] The scroll would be rolled up and worn in a container. Lady Drower believes that the lead strip was immersed in water and the water swallowed by the person to be cured or exorcised.[116] The following lines from Lidzbarski's lead amulet invoke most of the divine and demonic names mentioned above (notice the guttural [illegible]: ע is not dropped in the name of Manda d̲-Hiia):

And the Planets how evil they are – who arise in a rage intending evil. . . . (lines 15 – 21) The pure Yōšamin and Abatur have strengthened it. Ptahil, who built the House, has strengthened it. Their five leaders have strengthened it. . . ." (lines 244 – 257)[117]

The first Mandaic bowl inscription was published by Pognon, the French consul at Baghdad in 1892. The bowl came from Bismaya (Adab) south of Nippur.[118] The exterior is inscribed with: . . . [illegible] . . . [illegible] "Bound . . . of the crescent-spirit . . ." and the interior begins with: . . . Almost every incantation and amulet begins with the opening phrases: ࡁࡔࡅࡌࡀࡉࡄࡅࡍ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡓࡁࡉࡀ "In the name of the Great Life", ࡀࡎࡅࡕࡀ ࡅࡆࡓࡀࡆࡕࡀ ࡅࡄࡀࡕࡉࡌࡕࡀ "May there be health, armament and sealing", ࡊࡁࡉࡔࡀ ࡅࡃࡇࡉࡉࡀ ࡋࡅࡈࡀࡕࡀ "Averted and driven away are the curses"; ࡃࡇࡉࡒࡀ ࡊࡅࡋࡄࡅࡍ ࡋࡅࡈࡀࡕࡀ ࡅࡋࡀࡈࡀࡕࡀ "Repulsed are all the curses and incantations"

Analyzing the Mandaean texts, one can find that the demonized Mesopotamian deities, which are also mentioned in the later Mandaic text corpus, prove without doubt that they were borrowed from a Late Parthian cultural setting of Central Babylonia.[119] Therefore, Mandaean incantations are essential to the study of the origin of this people. Rudolph believes that the "Mandaic incantation corpus belongs to a sunken higher religion. . . . The Mesopotamian and Iranian elements of the Mandaean texts and their placement are of major importance when it comes to the question of the Mandaeans' homeland."[120]

§ 1.8 - The Mandaean Manuscripts.

It is assumed that the first Mandaean manuscript (Diwan) was brought to Europe in 1652 by Carlo Leonelli who was known as Friar Ignatius of Jesus while he was on a mission to Basra. In 1674 François de la Croix brought to Paris the most important Mandaean manuscript, the Ginza. The French ambassador at Constantinople sent other manuscripts in 1678. More Mandaean manuscripts reached Europe successively.[121]

Many scholars studied and published Mandaean literature such as M. Thávenot (1663) and M. Norberg (1781), who exerted a considerable effort in laying the foundation of Mandaean textual study. Peterman (1867) made a translation of the Ginza based on four Paris manuscripts and published it under the name Sidra Rabba. Depending on this translation, W. Brandt (1893) published a German translation of selected passages.[122] In 1915 M. Lidzbarski published the translation of draša ḏ-yahia (The Book of John), the Qolasta (liturgical collection) and the Ginza respectively.

Lidzbarski's distinguished work was continued by E. S. Drower who opened new horizons in the field of Mandaean research. She succeeded where the others failed and her achievements in this field were remarkable. Her dedication to Mandaism and her long stay in Iraq made her welcome among the Mandaean community. She traveled to Iraq many times and on several occasions visited their bit-manda (temple), in Liṭlaṭa – Qal'at Ṣaleh, Maisan province (southern Mesopotamia), and became acquainted with their traditions and customs. She won the confidence of the Mandaeans and obtained from them a complete collection of 56 Mandaean manuscripts. This collection is known as "Drower Collection" and deposited in the Bodleian Library in Oxford.[123] Lady Drower translated and published most of the collection, in addition to the Mandaic Dictionary which she compiled and published with R. Macuch in 1963.

The oldest Mandaean manuscript in Europe (Marsh. 691) is kept in the Bodleian library. It is a collection of prayers copied by the scribe Adam Zihrun, son of Bihran Šitlan in the year 1529. This codex belonged to a certain Thomas Marshal (1620 or 21- 1685), an English philologist, and was given to Bodleian in 1689 or 1690 by his servant.[124]

§ 1.9 - The Ginza Rba (The Great Treasure)

The Ginza is a big codex (more than 654 pages or 327 folios) consists of two parts: the Right Ginza (GR) and the Left Ginza (GL) each part opposite the other. The Ginza is divided into twenty-one chapters or tractates: eighteen tractates belong to the right Ginza and three tractates to the left Ginza.

§ 1 .9. 1 - The Right Ginza

The first two tractates of (GR 1 and GR 2) include moral teachings and description and praise of the King of Light and his world. The third tractate (GR 3) pp. 83– 148, [125] which is the largest in the Ginza, contains the Story of Creation (the subject of this research). The fourth tractate (GR 4) pp. 148-157 is a brief description of Manda d̠-Hiia's baptism in the heavenly Yardina (Jordan) by Mar d̠-Rabuta (the Lord of Greatness) plus part of Hibil-Ziwa's descent to the underworld. The fifth tractate (GR 5) pp. 157-237 consists of five sections: (1) Hibil-Ziwa's journey to the Realm of Darkness (or: the underworld). (2) The gods and demons' defeated by Manda d̠-Hiia. (3) The souls' ascension to the Maṭarata (purgatories). (4) Narration of John the Baptist baptizing Manda d̠-Hiia in the living water of Jordan. (5) The 'uthra Šalmai's questioning by the heavenly figure Yatrun.

[125] Numeration is according to the copy of the Ginza (GRS) used in this research.

The sixth tractate (GR 6), pp. 237-248, is the journey of Dinanukt[126] ("talking in accordance with religion") to the upper worlds. The Seventh tractate (GR 7) pp. 248-257 contains some of John the Baptist's commandments. The eight tractate (GR 8) pp.257-261 is a small tractate which includes Manda d̠-Hiia's warning the faithful against Rūha. Tractate nine (GR 9) pp. 261-283 includes two sections: (1) The first is called ࡒࡀࡓࡒࡀࡋࡕࡀ ࡖࡔࡅࡁࡀ ࡊࡅࡊࡁࡉࡀ qarqalta d̠-šuba kukbia "the overthrow of seven stars", a polemic chapter against other (false) religious sects. (2) The second section is 'the emanation of Mar d̠-Rabuta from the ࡍࡉࡈࡅࡐࡕࡀ niṭufta (semen?) of the heavenly Jordan'. It also contains material related to creation. Tractate ten (GR 10) pp. 283-297 is a continuation of the creation story and is called 'the Book of Radiance that radiates in the pihta'. Tractate eleven (GR 11), pp. 297-325, is called "the Book of Great Anoš" which deals with the conflict between the [126] Dinanukt is a legendary figure of the Ginza. Dinanukt is an old Persian word means "talking in accordance with religion". (MD p. 108) The legend says that din melek uthra (a heavenly being) was sent to the wise priest Dinanukt, who wanted to know about where Life is, and the nature of Kušṭa. He fell into a trance and his soul traveled with din melek, in a journey to the underworld (Siniawis) where he saw the melki (spirits) of darkness, and then to the different layers of the World of Light. There the ground was like crystal, and there was no darkness. Eventually, he returned to his body and told his people of what he saw in his journey. (For more analysis of this Ginza figure see Widengren, 1950: 62 ff. See also "How Dana Nuk Visited the Seventh Heaven" MII, Ch. IX p. 300). (Cf. "the saintly reformer", Herzfeld, Archaeological History of Iran (1935) p. 100).

World of Light and Rūha. It also mentions the faulty creation of the material world by Ptahil.

Tractate twelve (GR 12), pp. 325-341, has seven sections. The first section has the uthra Anoš as the speaker. Sections 2, 3, 4 and 5 are hymns some of which are similar to the hymns of the Canonical Prayerbook of the Mandaeans.[127] Section 6 describes the World of Darkness and its king and inhabitants. Section 7 is a kind of geography; it shows the directions of the worlds and waters. Tractate thirteen (GR 13), pp. 341-349, is called "he Prayer of the Tarmidia (Mandaean priests) to the Pious".[128] Tractate fourteen (GR 14), pp. 352-362, is called "the Book of the Great Nbaṭ" which narrates the emanation of Yawar, Yōšamin (the second Life) and many other heavenly beings. Tractate fifteen (GR 15), pp. 364-443, consists of twenty poetic sections of the Redeemer speeches and blessings. Section 15 is Ptahil lamentation and threat of waging a war. Section 16 narrates Manda d-Hiia's visit to Yōšamin and his debate with him. Tractate 16 (GR 16), pp. 446-459, consists of 11 sections, also poetic. The first section speaks of Manda d-Hiia's visit to the world of the Second Life. The rest are speeches and exhortations of the Redeemer.

Tractate seventeen (GR 17), pp. 462-469, consists of two poetic sections: the first talks about the Great First Mana and the Great Occult Eggs that existed before Mar d̠-Rabuta (The Lord of Greatness). The second part speaks about the oppression of the Seven (planets) and the Twelve (zodiacs) against the nišmata (souls). Tractate twelve (GR 18), pp. 472-491, is a chronology of the material world. It contains information about the three catastrophes which befell the humans in three different epochs or generations.[129] and many other historical events.

[127] The hymn in section GR 12:4 is identical to CP hymn n. 214 p. 183.

[128] Buckley believes that the first 13 tractates of the Ginza testify to a fully developed Mandaean Gnosticism (Buckley, 2005: 22).

§ 1.9.2 - The Left Ginza

This part of the Ginza is divided into three sections or tractates. The first tractate (GRL I) pp. 46-89 consists of four sections. The first section tells the story of Adam and his death, and how Adam's son Šitil (Seth) volunteers to die before his father. The second section is about Adam's complaints about his death and his lamentation. The third section is about Hawa's (Eve) death. The forth is a description of different maṭaratia (watch-houses or purgatories) which the soul has to go through before her final destination.

The second tractate (GRL III) pp. 46-89 consists of twenty-eight sections of poetry. In this tractate the Great Mana speaks, beginning each section with the formula: 'I am a Mana of the Great Life.' The last tractate of the Ginza (GL 3) pp. 89-164 consists of 62 sections and deal with the nišimta (soul) and her destiny. It also includes the lamentation of the mana personifying the soul.

§ 1.10 - The Ginza used in the Research (GRS):

The copy of the Ginza (GRS) used in this work consists of 332 folios (664 pages), and each page consits of 25 lines. It was written in Iran in the late 1990s under the supervision of the Mandaean Council of Ahwaz. The headscribe of this Ginza is Rbai Ganzibra Mhatam Yuhana br Šarat (his Arabic name: Shaikh Jabar the son of Ṭawoos), who is the head-priest of the Mandaean community in Iran (he became a priest in 1948). The colophon at the end of the left part of this Ginza (GRL p. 169) tells us that this copy was written after consulting 5 other Ginzas. The scribes of these Ginzas are: Yahia Ram Zihrun the son of the Rbai Zeki Zihrun, Ram Yuhana the son of Rbai Ram, Zeki Zihrun the son of Ram Zihrun, Sam Yuhana the son of Rbai Behram and Zihrun the son of Mudalal. A copy of Petermann's Ginza was consulted, which he copied during his vistit to southern Iraq in the 1840s from 4 Ginzas, as the colophon calls them (A, B, C, D).[130] Ganzabra Ṣalaẖ Kuẖaili was at the head of the team which consisted of the following scribes and scholars: Tarmida Ṭalib Duraji, Tarmida Najaẖ Koẖaili, Yalufa Salem Kohaili, Yalufa Jamal Duraji and Yalufa Falah Kuẖaili. For the first time, in centuries, three Mandaean women participated in this work: Mudalal the daughter of Šarat and Simat and Sadia the daughters of Mahnuš.

For this research four other Ginza manuscripts from the Oriental and India Office at The British Library in London were collated to compile a critical apparatus of variants. The first manuscript is under the title: "Liber Adami Mendaice" No. Add 23,599 (henceforth BL 23599) and was presented by Sheik Yahana Chief and High Priest of the Mandaean sect with his petition to her Majesty the Queen, dated 10th December 1872, and forwarded to HM's Ambassador at Constantinople with dispatch No, 3 dated 29th Jan. 1873 from Colonel Herbert, Consul General of Baghdad. The second manuscript bears the title: "Liber Adami Mendaice" No. Add. 23,600 (henceforth: BL 23600). This Ginza is the oldest one in the British Library (bought from Mrs. Taylor in April 1860) and consisting of 315 folios and the scribe is Adam Yuhana. The third Ginza codex in the British Library is 'Liber Adami Mendaice' Add. 23,601(henceforth BL 23601) copied by Adam Yuhana, son of Sam. The third Ginza codex is 'Liber Adami Mandaice' Add. 23,601 dated 1824, also copied by Adam Yuhana, son of Sam. The forth manuscript is entitled: Sidra Rba Mandaitic, Oriental 1236 (henceforth BLO 1236).

Due to many factors, the hand written Mandaean manuscripts are in general tiresome and not easy to read, especially the manuscript (Add 23,599 = BL 23599) of the British Library. Some of these factors are:

1. Poor hand writing and careless copying led the scribes to make numerous spelling mistakes in the manuscripts.
2. These mistakes accumulated through the ages and led to many differences in readings.
3. The only method by which the scribe is allowed to edit a text is by placing dots under the wrongly written word or sentence, because the Mandaeans believe their writings are sacred and incorrect words or sentences cannot be erased or crossed.

4. The Mandaean manuscripts have no paragraph indents or punctuation marks.
5. Many words are hyphenated (especially at the end of the line) which causes confusion to the reader.
6. Ambiguities in Mandaean script often cause uncertainty and confusion in reading hand written Mandaean texts. The letters which cause such confusion are: ࡒ (ק) and ࡎ (ם); ࡓ (ר) and ࡃ (ד); ࡃ (ד) and ࡁ (ב); ࡄࡅࡍ (הון) and ࡑ (ץ); ࡀ (א) and ࡄ (ה̱); ࡒ (ק) and ࡁ (ב); ࡍ (ן), ࡐ (ף) and ࡊ (כ). The computer Mandaic font used in this work attempts to faithfully reproduce the manuscript text, but at the same time compensates for the poor handwriting and careless copying in the manuscripts.

The computerized Mandaic font reproduces original text while correcting scribal errors to a great extent. Most previous scholars were obliged to transliterate the Mandaean texts either into Hebrew or Roman characters. A notable exception, and the first scholar who used a Mandaic typeface, was the Frenchman H. Pognon, in his book 'Inscriptions Mandaïtes des Coupes de Khouabir', published in 1898. The computerized characters used in this work are similar to Pognon's. The present work also transliterates every line of the text into Hebrew characters beneath the Mandaic in order to facilitate reading for non-specialists. There are inevitable discrepancies between the present version of the Ginza and the other four versions mentioned above. The number shown on the margin of some of the pages of the translation correspond to the beginning of the page in the original text.

The translator of the Mandaic texts encounters some difficulties such as:

1. The material of the Mandaean cosmogony, cosmology, theology and soteriology is distributed among much Mandaean literature such as the ࡂࡉࡍࡆࡀ ࡓࡁࡀ Ginza Rba, ࡃࡓࡀࡔࡀ ࡖࡉࡀࡄࡉࡀ Draša d̲-Yahia (The Book of John), Mandaean Hymns and Prayers; ࡌࡀࡑࡁࡅࡕࡀ Maşbuta, ࡌࡀࡎࡒࡉࡕࡀ Masqita, ࡏࡍࡉࡀࡍࡉࡀ 'Eniania, etc), and among the different Diwans, such as Diwan Abatur. Mandaean literature is written mostly in mystical way and many religious concepts are considered sacred explanation of which are "reserved for those considered able to understand and preserve the gnosis."[131]
2. Most of the Mandaean priests abstain (by law) from discussing profound religious matters with a Mandaean layman or a stranger. The holy scriptures strongly advise Mandaean priests against revealing these scriptures to strangers. For example the Alf Trisar Šuialia (The Thousand and Twelve Questions) commences with the following ࡆࡄࡀࡓࡀ zhara "admonition":

> In the name of the Life. Laufa (union) and revival of life and a forgiver of sins be there for me N ... by means of these good Questions, hidden from (even) the eyes of the uthras and not revealed except to such as guard them, and tell them to one in a generation each to his son. For Hibil-Ziwa placed them in his son's right hand and said, 'Take care, take care, take care,

three hundred and sixty thousand times take care of these Good Questions which Hibil-Ziwa asked of Nbaṭ the Great." [132]

The ࡍࡀࡑࡅࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ Naṣoraeans (the priestly group of the Mandaeans) are keen not to reveal the mysteries of the ࡍࡀࡑࡉࡓࡅࡕࡀ Naṣiruta (priestly knowledge) to their own laity, except to those elite of Mandaeans who dedicate themselves Naṣiruta and have proven themselves worthy in the line of priesthood. The Naṣoraeans guard their holy books and scrolls intimately. Their mysteries are not imparted to the Mandaean laymen, no matter how religious they are, fearing that these mysteries might be misinterpreted.[133]

3. The neglect which the Mandaean literature suffered from, for more than fourteen centuries, lead to many differences between the vernacular Mandaean and the Classical Naṣoraean Mandaean writings.[134] Most of the Mandaean priests did not receive their priestly knowledge in religious institutes. They usually obtain their priesthood knowledge and apprenticeship from their fathers or from other elderly priests. They teach the initiates reading, writing and the comprehension of Mandaean language, in addition to the practice of the different rites (baptism, communion, marriage etc.) meticulously.[135]

The Ginza remains as the largest codex which the Mandaeans inherited from their golden era when Gnosticism flourished amongst the civilization of Babylon and Persia in the east and amongst the Greek and Roman empires in the west. In addition to the liturgies, the Ginza contains the oldest Gnostic (Mandaean) tradition. The Mandaean Gnostic library is equally as important as Nag Hammadi Codices and the Dead Sea Scrolls and they deserve more attention and examination from scholars of Semitic studies.[136]

§ 1.11 - The Mandaean Script:

The Mandaic script belongs to the South Mesopotamian branch of Aramaic besides the Syriac-Palmyrene branch in North Syria and the script of Hatra in north Mesopotamia.[137] The Mandaeans call their alphabet abgada. The twenty four letters are sacred and represent the powers of Life and Light. They believe that their inscriptions are protected by Nbu (Babylonian Nabû) "Mercury", the god of writing and wisdom.[138] Some scholars, such as Macuch, believe that there is a close relation between the Mandaic and the Elymaic scripts. Others like Nöldke and Lidzbarski suppose that Mandaic script is related to the Nabaţian.[139] The Mandaic script is known to us either from the Mandaean manuscripts or form amulets and incantations. Most of them were probably composed during the Sasanian era and the early Islamic conquest of Iraq, but the earliest known Mandaic text is a lead amulet from the first half of the third century.[140]

[139] Naveh, 1970: 33.

No one can precisely determine when the Mandaeans manufactured their script, but Naveh argues that the shapes of the letters suggest that the Mandiac cursive script is a "straightforward evolution from Elymaic."[141] Since Mesene (Maisan) and Characene were neighbours of the kingdom of Elymais, such assumption is strengthened. Many features of the Mandaic script resemble both the Nabaţaean and the Aramaic of Tang-i Sarvak and Elymaic, such as the letters (ࡀ) alef, which is simplified from the Elymaic heart shape, (ࡌ) mem (ࡁ) bet, (ࡃ) dalet, etc., but there is no resemblance between the Mandaic(ࡔ) (š) and the Elymaic shen. [142] Macuch noted, "the most remarkable Mandaean ligatures in the Elymaean inscriptions are the relative particle (ࡖ) d̲- and the conjunction (ࡗ) kd̲ which includes it."[143]

There remains the possibility that the Naşoreans had brought their own script when they migrated to Southern Mesopotamia, sinces many Mandaean hymns and prayers suggest such a migration. Macuch beleives that the Mandaic script had developed in the second century C.E., since there are no significant differences between the Mandaean script on the one hand and the Elymaean and Charcenian on the other.[144]

§ 1.12 - Book III of the Ginza Rba:

Book three, or the Book of Creation, is the largest tractate of the Mandaeans' holy book the 'Ginza Rba'. The Ginza names this tractate as: ࡓࡀࡆࡀ ࡅࡎࡉࡃࡓࡀ ࡒࡀࡃࡌࡀࡉࡀ ࡃࡔࡅࡈࡀ ࡄࡀࡉࡕࡀ ࡒࡀࡃࡌࡀࡉࡕࡀ ࡃࡄࡅࡀࡕ ࡌࡍ ࡋࡀࡒࡀࡃࡌࡀࡉࡀ raza u sidra qadmaia d̲-šuta haita qadmaita d̲huat mn laqadmaia 'The Mystery and the First Book of the First Living Doctrine which was from aforetime (or: from the very beginning)".[145] This tractate includes the cosmogony; the origin of the world of light and the world of darkness, the rise of the First Great Life, the Second Life (Yōšamin), the Third Life (Abatur) and the Forth Life (Ptahil); the demiurge who created the cosmos and Tibil (the earthly world). It also narrates the creation of the Mandaean redeemer Manda d̲-Haiia ('Gnosis of Life' or: 'Knowledge-of-Life') and his descent to the underworld and his triumph against the creatures of darkness. It narrates the creation of Adam and Eve and the descent of the nišimta (soul) into the 'sṭōna (the human body). Tractate III also includes an elaborate description of the demonic Rūha and her planetary sons and her attempts to seduce Adam in order to entrap him in the world.

[145] Widengren believes that the Mesopotamian back ground of heavenly books preexistent before creation and containing destinies is clear in the conception of the Book III of the Ginza (Widengren, 1950: 10, 74-75).

The "Mystery and the First Book of the First Living Doctrine" begins with folio 42r (p. 83) and ends at folio 74v (p. 148: 6) in the copy of the Ginza used in this work.[146] The language of is mostly poetic and written in classical Mandaic. The text consists of 2 prose sections and 2 poetic sections. The text begins with a prose section (pp. 83: 15 – 87: 21) followed by a prolonged poetic section (pp. 87: 21 – 119: 1). A second, but smaller, prose section is found nearly in the middle of the text (pp. 119: 1 – 120: 11) followed by another poetic section until the end of the text.

§ 1.13 - The Mandaean Story of Creation

Mesopotamia gave birth to many legends and myths such, as the epic of Gilgamesh, Enūma Eliš, Ninūrta, Ea and Inana. Out of the crucible of Mesopotamia, the land of reeds and swamps comes forth the Mandaean story of Creation. It is a unique piece of literature infused with Babylonian gods, demons and biblical motifs. With the conquest of Babylon by the Persian Empire 539 BCE,[147] and the subsequence Greek invasion of Alexander the Great in 332 BCE,[148] the Mandaean story of creation comes under the influence of Persian dualism and Greek mythology.

It addresses hiia qadmaiia the Ancient Life, the afterlife, Dualism, and cosmology. The language symbolic of Gnosticism is very poetical and is the first complete account of creation from Mesopotamia. It contains ethical and religious principles that emerged during the period when Mesopotamians demonised their gods. The Mandaean priests still recite the story of creation, on the banks of the rivers, in the same manner as their ancestors the Naṣraeans used to do in the ancient times.

[147] George Roux, Ancient Iraq, (1964) p. 352.
[148] Cantor N. F., Alexander the Great, (2005) p. 142.

The Mandaean story of creation is the product of the beginning of the Gnostic era when the Mandaean world was imprinted by the dualism of ࡀࡋࡌࡀ ࡖࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ alma ḏ-nhūra the World of Light and ࡀࡋࡌࡀ ࡖࡄࡔࡅࡊࡀ alma ḏ-hšuka the World of Darkness. The World of Light was conceived by unknown god ࡍࡅࡊࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ nukraiia (alien); a sublime being usually referred to as ࡌࡀࡍࡀ mana (the First) Intelligence, ࡄࡉࡉࡀ hiia The Life and ࡌࡀࡋࡊࡀ ࡖࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ malka d-nhūra the King of Light. ࡀࡋࡌࡀ ࡖࡄࡔࡅࡊࡀ alma ḏ-hšuka the World of Darkness is the product of the dark waters and is ruled by the King of Darkness, the leviathan 'Ur, and his mother/spouse Rūha;the goddess of the underworld. The Mandaean story of Creation narrates the doomed revolt of the vice-regent Yōšamin (the Second Life) and his sons, the uthras, Abatur (the Third Life) and Ptahil (the Forth Life and the demiurge who created the physical world), against the higher deities of the World of Light. It also describes the eternal conflict between Light and Darkness and the defeat of the World of Darkness on the hands of the valiant uthra Manda ḏ-Hiia (Gnosis of Life) when he descended to the underworld and subdued the evil creatures of darkness. The prime of the Story of Creation is the creation of Adam, the First Man, by Ptahil with the assistance of Rūha and her sons ࡔࡉࡁࡉࡀࡄࡉࡉࡀ šibiahiia (the Planets), but Ptahil could not make Adam stand on his feet. A mana, a sparkle of Light, was brought form the World of Light and cast into Adam's trunk. At that moment Adam opened his eyes and stood on his feet. The beings of Light created Hawa (Eve), to be Adam's wife in order to spread ࡔࡅࡓࡁࡕࡀ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ šurbta d̲-hiia the family of Life.

The Mandaean story of creation contains many obscure terms of creation such as pira (fruit), mana (intelligence, mind) ziwa (radiance), nhūra (light) ayar (ether), yardina (Jordan), uthras (beings of Light), hapiqia mia (streams o f water), yura (a being of light, brilliance), ࡍࡉࡔࡉࡌࡕࡀ ࡅࡓࡅࡄࡀ nišimta urūha (soul and spirit) and many more. There is not one single account of the creation of the cosmos, but rather multiple accounts. In the Ginza Rba there are no less than seven accounts of the Creation, viz. in tractates 1, 2, 3, 10, 13, 15, and 18. Tractate III, however, contains the most part of the story. This work endeavors to explain such obscurities for a better understanding of the Mandaean legend of creation. Book III consists of four fractions; two written in prose and two in poetry:

1. The first fraction (GRR, pp. 83: 16 - 87: 21) begins with prose language narrating the first emanation of the Mana and the manifestation of the Life and the other principles of cosmogony, including the creation of the Mandaean messenger Manda d̲-Hiia.
2. The second fraction (GRR, pp. 87: 21 – 119: 1) is written in poetical language. It is the longest fraction of book III and narrates: (a) The descent of the Messenger Manda d̲-Hiia to the World of Darkness and his confrontation with the forces of the World of Darkness. (b) The creation of the material world by the Mandaean demiurge "Ptahil".

3. The third fraction (GRR, pp. 119 - 120: 11) is the shortest fraction, written in prosaic language, and speaks about the time of creation and about Ptahil's intentions concerning the creation of Adam and Eve with the assistance of the Planets.
4. The fourth fraction (GRR, pp. 120: 11 until the end of the book i.e. p. 148) narrates (a) The creation of Adam and Eve. (b) The descent of the nišimta "soul" into Adam's body (c) Rūha's attempts to seduce Adam in order to capture him in the world. (d) Manda d̲-Hiia prevents Rūha and her entourage "the Planets" from tempting Adam. (e) Description of the sects which were produced from the forces of Darkness.

§ 1.14 - The Main features of Mandaic Poetry:

Since the Mandaeans were not at all familiar with punctuation, it is hard to distinguish between the prosaic and poetic passages in the Mandaean texts. In spite of this, Lidzbarski could differentiate between the two types. He wrote a plausible introduction dedicated to the Mandaic and Aramaic poetry in his valuable book "Mandäische Liturgien".[149]

The language of the Ginza belongs to the classical period, which was not under the influence of the Arabic language.[150] This may prove that the redaction of the book was long before the Islam conquest of Iraq in the seventh century C.E. The Ginza is written mainly in poetry which "represents a fully developed Babylonian-Aramaic idiom and a poetic skill which has neither surpassed nor equaled in Mandaean literature."[151] Their geographical remoteness also made them less exposed to the Hellenistic influences.[152]

[149] Lidzbarski, Mandäische Liturgien, Berlin (1920).

[150] Macuch has divided the Mandaic literature into three historical periods: classical, postclassical and modern. The final redaction of the classical period took place in the year 272 CE according to the Mandaean copyist Zāzai d̲-Gawaztā (Macuch, 1965: LXV).

Unfortunately, this aspect of Mandaic literature remained neglected by the Semitists until Söderbergh shed the light on various Mandaic poetic forms compared to the psalms of the Coptic Psalms of Thomas. He claimed priority for the Mandaic hymns over the Coptic ones.[153] After his detailed comparison he concluded that the "Mandaic poetry, had on the whole a regular beat of 3:3, that is the line consisted of two hemistiches with three stresses in each hemistich."[154] Example:

ࡔࡀࡋࡈࡅࡊ ࡏࡋ ࡏࡅࡕࡓࡉࡀ ࡊࡀࡎࡉࡀ	שאלטוך על עותריא כאסיא
ࡖࡒࡀࡉࡌࡉࡀ ࡅࡌࡔࡀࡁࡉࡀ ࡋࡓࡅࡓࡁࡉࡀ	דקאימיא ומשאביא לרורביא
ࡔࡀࡋࡈࡅࡊ ࡏࡋ ࡉࡀࡓࡃࡍࡀ ࡖࡓࡅࡓࡁࡉࡀ	שאלטוך על יארדנא דרורביא
ࡅࡏࡋ ࡌࡉࡀ ࡄࡀࡉࡉࡀ ࡅࡓࡀࡅࡆࡉࡀ	ועל מיא הייא וראוזיא

He made you rule over the concealed uthras, who are standing and praising the great (ones)
He made rule over the Jordan of the great (ones), and over thee living and vigorous waters.[155]

[153] Söderbergh, 1949: 127 f.
[154] Greenfield, 1989: 101.
[155] GRR, p. 89: 8

The transposition language[156] is a main feature of the Mandaic poetry; that is repeating the same verse with changing position of the words. Example:

ࡕࡓࡉࡎࡀࡓ ࡁࡅࡓࡉࡀ ࡒࡀࡁࡋࡀࡕ ࡌࡉࡍࡄ תריסאר בוריא קאבלאת מינה
ࡌࡉࡍࡄ ࡒࡀࡁࡋࡀࡕ ࡕࡓࡉࡎࡀࡓ ࡁࡅࡓࡉࡀ מינה קאבלאת תריסאר בוריא
She conceived by him twelve beasts,
by him she conceived twelve beasts.[157]

Another interesting feature of the Mandaic poetry is the paired words. The following examples taken from book III of the Ginza: ࡉࡀࡒࡃࡉࡀ ࡅࡌࡄࡀࡁࡉࡁࡉࡀ יאקדיא ומהאביביא "burn and blaze" (89: 25), ࡆࡓࡉࡆࡀ ࡅࡌࡆࡀࡓࡆࡉࡀ זריזא ומזארזיא "the well armed and equipped" (89: 1), ࡄࡀࡎࡉࡓ ࡅࡁࡑࡉࡓ האסיר ובציר "flaw and deficiency" (88: 22), ࡄࡀࡓࡔࡉࡀ ࡅࡐࡅࡃࡓࡉࡀ הארשיא ופודריא "witchcraft and sorcery" (90: 4), ࡎࡍࡉࡀ ࡅࡌࡎࡀࡍࡋࡀ "repulsive and dreadful (or: ugly and appalling)" (91: 3), ࡆࡓࡉࡆࡀ ࡅࡌࡒࡀࡉࡌࡀ זריזא ומקאימא "the valiant and confirmed" (93: 7), ࡁࡄࡉࡓࡉࡀ ࡆࡉࡃࡒࡀ בהיריא זידקא "the righteous elect" (93: 11), ࡏࡓࡉࡀ ࡅࡓࡀࡅࡆࡉࡀ עריא וראוזיא "radiant and resplendent" (91:25) etc.

Greenfield draws out attention to a "favorite topos" in the Mandaean literature which concerns parts of the body and senses – eyes, ears, mouth hands, knees, feet etc.[158] The following from book III is a good example. These verses remind us of the Song of Songs:

ࡒࡅࡌࡕࡉࡊ ࡀࡓࡆࡀ ࡓࡀࡌࡀ	קומתיך ארזא ראמא

In book III we find good examples of the Naṣoraean Gnostic poetry which needs more attention. In this respect Jonas plausibly noted: "The Mandaic poetry gives wonderful expression to the gratefully believing acceptance of the message and the ensuing conversion of the heart and renewal of life."[160]

[159] GRR, 137: 21

[160] Jonas, 1958: 89. Stroumsa indicates that the Gnostic language is an imagery one and it should be studied as "mystical poetry" (Stroumsa, 1984:3).

§2 - Analysis of the Narrative

§2 - Analysis of the Narrative:

§ 2 .1 - The First Account of the Theogony:

The text begins with the following formula:

> In the name of the great ࡍࡅࡊࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ nukraiia alien Life [161] from the countless worlds of Light which is above all deeds. This is the mystery and the First Book of the First Living Doctrine which was from afore time. [162]

The main events in this account are: (a) at the beginning the pira (fruit) was inside the pira and the ayar (eather) was inside the ayar. (2) The great Mana (intelligence) "awakened" and produced great manas without count. (3) great and countless piras and škinas (celestial dwellings) emanated from the great pira. (4) by the will of the great Mana, the great white yardina (Jordan) "river" came into being and from the great Jordan countless jordans came into being.

The first account of theogony contains three main elements of creation: (a) ࡐࡉࡓࡀ Pira "fruit" (b) ࡀࡉࡀࡓ Ayar (Ether) (c) ࡌࡀࡍࡀ Mana (Mind or: Intelligence). The ࡔࡊࡉࡍࡀࡕࡀ škinas (celestial dwelling) and the ࡉࡀࡓࡃࡍࡀ Yardina (Jordan) are the products of the first emanation:

[161] ࡍࡅࡊࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ nukraiia "alien" or "strange", theologically "inconceivable", "remote", "indefinable", is a constant characteristic of the "Life", the main deity in the Mandaean belief. The formula, 'In the name of the great first alien Life from the countless world of light which is above all deeds' speaks of the 'first' Life 'that is above all deeds (or: creations),' i.e., above the world and 'free from any kind of relation to the world (Rudolf, K., 1983: 62). The concept of the alien Life is one of the impressive word-symbols and a major theme which we encounter in Gnostic speech (Stroumsa, 1984: 87). The alien is that which stems from elsewhere and does not belong here (Jonas, H., 1958: 49). The Life is an outer entity ࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡁࡀࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ hiia baraiia (CP p. 78), and therefore the Mandaeans, and the Gnostics in general, saw themselves as a "kingless race" ruled by no one (Stroumsa, 1984: 87).

> When the Pira was inside the Pira, and when the Ayar was inside the Ayar, and when the great Mana of glory was there, great and mighty Manas came into being, whose radiance is so vast and whose light is great; no one before them was in the great fruit which was so immense and without limit, and whose radiance was greater than the words of the mouth and his light was bigger than what the lips can portray. As He was inside (or: in the matrix of) the Fruit, a thousand thousand fruits without limit, and countless myriads of fruits emanated from him. In each and every fruit were a thousand thousand fruits without limit, and countless myriads of škinas. They all stand there and praise the great Mana of glory who exists (lives) in the great Ether of Life that is within the Jordan (river) of the white waters which gushed out from the Great Mana. Then the great Jordan came into being, and from the great Jordan, Jordans without count poured forth. [163] (See Chart A).

§2 .1. 1 - ࡐࡉࡓࡀ Pira:

The meaning of Pira is uncertain and doubtful; of various suggested meanings, perhaps that of "Fruit" (H. פרי) or "vagina". [164] This term is used by the Mandaeans as an expression of emanation.[165] In the first version of creation we find out that the Pira (fruit) and the Ayar (ether) are the two primal elements of existence and the "habitat" in which the Great Mana (mind, intelligence) existed. In the Mandaean belief, the Pira Rba (Great Pira) is the origin of all things.[166] It existed before creation and before all worlds (aeons) and is the core matter of existence. It is the original divine power from which everything came into being, even the King of Light:

[163] GRR p. 83: 19.

[164] The second meaning for the pira is "cleft" or "vagina" as in, ࡐࡉࡓࡀ ࡐࡉࡎࡋࡀ "vagina and phallus" (MD. P., 372).

[165] The epithet Fruit used of the moon-god in Mesopotamia, of whom it is said that he is the Fruit which is born by itself, 'en-bu šá ina ra-ma-ni-šū ib-ba-nu' (Tallquist, Akkadische Götterepitheta, p. 24 cited by Widengren, 1946: 22 n. 3).

[166] Other Gnostics such as Basilides (2nd century religious teacher in Alexandria – Egypt) believe that all the universe and creations derived their being form the cosmic seed (Wilson, 1958: 124).
According to Zurvanism, the old Persian religion, Time enters a body within the seed of creation or unformed matter, from which all forms arose (Zaehner, 1955: 111 ff.).

> Before all the worlds came into being there was this great fruit. When the great fruit was inside the great fruit, the King of Light came into existence.[167]

The Great Pira is a primal entity and a symbol of fertility. It is the "womb" or the "matrix" which gave birth to the succeeding manifestations of the beings of Light, when the first Intelligence (Mana) decided to cohabit with its ࡃࡌࡅࡕࡀ dmuta "counterpart" (or with its ࡑࡀࡅࡕࡀ ṣauta "companion") in order to create ࡀࡃࡉࡀࡅࡓࡉࡀ adiauria "helpers", erect the heavenly lights and bring forth messengers of life to preserve him in his concealment, as we perceive from the following passage:

> I am conversing with my dmuta (counterpart) [168] (and say to her), Come, let us, create (lit. build), me and you, through a mystic call in the sublime fruit. Until fruits are created for us, until helpers are sent for us, you will praise me and I will praise you. We will remain preserved within the ample radiance and provide (lit. arrange) for each other perfectly . . . As he spoke thus, he thought of the ṣauta (companion)[169] that existed in the sublime fruit. He spoke and pondered, I will create ṣauta "companion" to my right and lights to > my left and I shall bring forth messengers of life to look after me in (my) concealment.[170]

The Mandaeans believe that every man and every light-being has a double; a counterpart. Each individual has his own likeness in the ideal world of Mšunia Kušṭa (the ideal world of the Mandaeans, and inhabited by their righteous doubles. (For more details on this ideal world see MII p. 54 n. 1 and SA Ch, V p. 39z). In the Peshitta the first born "Christ" is the image ܨܠܡܐ of god. (Widengren, 1964: 23) The Mandaean idea of "image" is repeated in Manichaeism: Mani received his revelation through his Syzygos "Twin or: Pair-comrade". (Gardner and Lieu, 2004: 5) The ancient Mesopotamians believed in the magic powers of the image as we read that the Mitanni king Tusharatta has sent an image of Ishtar to the Pharaoh of Egypt to cure him from an intractable disease (Roux 1964: 231).

[169] ࡑࡀࡅࡕࡀ ṣauta: consort, company, companionship, society (MD p. 386).

The Pira, the celestial fruit, is the dwelling of the nišmata "souls", where they grow and blossom, as well as it is the dwelling of the Mana, Life, and the other heavenly beings:

> "nišimta (the soul) grows and blossom in the Pira of the Life."[171]

This concept is emphasized by the messenger Hibil-Ziwa's[172] proclamation that he is the one who created the white fruit of in which the nišmata (souls) are imbued:

> I created the white fruit, in which the souls are enveloped. From it they flower up and ascend to be weighed.[173]

It is rather difficult to give a precise definition of the Pira because it is considered a ࡓࡀࡆࡀ raza mystery not revealed to any earthly being, even to prophets. John the Baptist iahia iuhana was ready to exchange his earthly life for the knowledge of the mysteries of the "world beyond" when the redeemer Manda d̠-Hiia appeared to him in the form of a young lad:

> And reveal to me the secrets of the kings (or: angels), and (the secrets of) ࡐࡉࡓࡀ ࡓࡁࡀ ࡖࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ pira rba d̠-nhūra the Great Fruit of Light, and why the clods and rubble (?) were subdued, and the basis of the

In the Ginza Rba, the Pira is personified as a heavenly being who takes part in promoting the redeemer Manda ḏ-Hiia (Gnosis of Life). It is by the great Pira of glory's command the redeemer received the kušṭa [175] from the Great Ones:

> "By the command of the Great Fruit of Glory, I (Manda ḏ-Hiia) received the kušṭa from them." [176]

Moreover, the Pira is the reward of the World of Light to the pious Mandaeans as we recite one the hymns of the masiqta (the book of masiqta Ascension):

> Thou hast spoken to us in thy Word and hast commanded us with thy command "Ask on earth and I will supply you with heavenly fruit: ask from below, (from) reed, swamp and mud, and I will supply you from the lofty heavens." [177]

[175] Kušṭa ࡊࡅࡔࡈࡀ قشط, vow, oath, pact, etc. (MD p. 209). Kušṭa is the ritual of the exchange of the right hand-clasp between the Mandaeans which occurs during sacraments (baptism, marriage, etc.). The act is concluded by a kiss, each of the two persons kissing his own right hand when the hand is released. The Pharsis greet one another with a similar rite called the hamazor (MII p. 238). Lady Drower believes that "the Pharsis use the hamazor as much as Mandaeans use the kušṭa" (ATŠ, p. 154 n. 1). The kušṭa is personified in many Mandaean manuscripts. It is a "messenger from the Life on his way hither" (ATŠ, p. 236). The kušṭa is considered a synonym of Manda ḏ-Hiia (CP p. 44). The seal of kušṭa binds and seals the souls and spirits (Ibid p. 63). In Mandaeism, kušṭa is an element closely related to the first creation. The Kušṭa is the 'heavenly' oath which every Mandaean has to take during baptism. The Mandaeans consider the Kušṭa a communion with the World of Light. The Primal man, according to the Manicheans, was delivered from his captivity among the hosts of Darkness by the supernal entity known as the Living Spirit, who extended to him his right hand and removed him from the conflict" (Reeves, 1996: 124). (For more details concerning the Kušṭa, see Sundberg, 1953).

The sexual symbolism is quite common in the Mandaean literature as well as in the rest of the Mesopotamian literature. Mandaeism is the faith of life and fertility,[178] and "if the man has no wife, there will no Paradise for him hereafter and no Paradise on earth."[179] The mystic union of the female and male principles is reflected in many hymns and songs. In the following marriage song, the Pira is the symbol of "virginity" or "womb":

> O crowned bride "Fruit that is enclosed! Who revealed our secret and broadcasted our wisdom to the highways? [180]

The Pira is related to other mystic elements of creation such as the tana (container, matrix), pihta (sacramental bread?), niṭufta (drop, sperm), and hilbuna (egg, container, habitat).[181] It is also identified with the [182]ࡕࡀࡍࡀ tana, which is another ambiguous other-worldly element of creation.[183]

§ 2.1.2 - ࡀࡉࡀࡓ Ayar (Ether):

Ayar (Ether) is the second element in the first version of creation with the Pira. It is the rarest of all elements of creation and a personification of the purest

This hymn provides strong evidence of the Mandaeans' natural habitats. [183] There are many resemblances between the Mandaean pira (fruit) and the seed in Basilides doctrine which says: "From the cosmic seed was begotten the Great Archon who created for himself a son. Then a demiurge comes into being who engendered a son from matter and reduced the world to order" (Wilson, 1958: 124-6).

heavenly atmosphere in which the Mandaean deities dwell.[184] The concept of Paradise in the Mandaean belief is different from that of the Jews, Christians and Moslems. The Mandaeans' final destination is the World of Light, a world of pure (energy) which contains no material pleasures.

When a Mandaean dies his soul is released and flies towards the [illegible] maṭaratia (purgatories or: watch-houses). After necessary purification the soul reaches her final destination; the realm of light. In the world of light there is nothing material, only jordans of living water, heavenly Ayar (Ether) which is most pure and clear and colorful flowers and evergreen plants and trees exist.[185] The soul brings Ayar with her when she descends into this world and settles in the human trunk and her (the soul) reward, after death, is to travel back to the World of Light and dwells in the sublime Ayar (Ether):

> She (the soul) rises up from one throne and seats herself on another > firm throne. And (thus) by means of nine occult process (ginzia)[186] we > set her up (at last) in the sublime Ayar (Ether). [187]

The Ayar (ether) preceded water in existence and in order to create the uthras and make them thrive, the Great One commanded that a "reservoir" of Living Water to be created and to flow to the (land of) Ether:

> In the Ayar (world) there is no water! As there is no water in the

They drank and rejoiced thereat and into their hearts Naṣiruta was installed. [189]

Ayar (Ether) is the swiftest elements of Life. It is the breath of Life which dwells in every living thing and the sweet breath from the North Star:

> Just at the first dawn, there comes a sweet breath from the North Star, a pure breeze from the North. We call it Ayar-Ziwa.[190]

Just as the heavenly Jordan mixes with the earthly waters and purifies them, Ayar mixes the worldly air and purifies it. Ayar-Rba (the Great Ether), Ayar-Ziwa (the Radiant Ether) and Ayar-Sagia[191] (the Plentiful Ether) are personification of the divine and pure atmosphere which gave birth to the messenger Hibil-Ziwa and all kings.[192]

The Essenes, share the idea that pure ether is the source of life, and believe that souls emanate from the most subtle air and incorporate with man's body.[193] Ayar perhaps corresponds to the old Persian the god of the wind Vāy, that blows between heaven and earth, and who became the space separating the Kingdom of Light above and the Kingdom of Darkenss below.[194] Just like Vāy who is located between the earth and sky, Mandaean Ayar exists above the sky and beneath the earth:

The Naṣoraiia are those who are thoroughly versed in the faith and doctrines of the sect. (ATŠ, p. 14) In this respect Rudolph writes, "The earliest self-designations to be found in Mandaean literature are "elect of righteous" (bhiri zidqa) and "Naṣoreans" (naṣuraiyī), i. e. "guardians" or "possessors" of secret rites and knowledge." (Rudolph, 1983: 343).

Like Vāy who is the life-giving power,[196] the Mandaean Ayer, who proceeded form Light, shines forth the uthras who dwell in the "world beyond":

> 'They sent Hibil-Ziwa to give them information to the uthras who sit there; and he said unto them, "From Radiance proceeded Light, and from Light proceeded Ayar (Ether), Ayar proceeded from Light and glory was shown forth to the uthras who sit there." [197]

ࡌࡀࡍࡀ Mana (often hardly translatable) is defined by Jonas: "Mana is the name for the transmundane Power of Light, the first deity, and at the same time that for the transcendent, non-mundane center of the individual ego."[198] The Great "Mana" is the Over-Soul, or Over-Mind, the earliest manifestation of the Great Life.

The "mana" of a human being is, so to speak, a spark of this flame, a temporarily detached part of the Great "Mana". This Gnostic conception appears in many forms of syncretistic philosophy.[199] In some features the Mandaean Mana corresponds to the Persian Vohu Mana (later form "Bahman") which means "good mind". It is the "power" which represents intelligence and wisdom.[200] He is the Lord of the Heaven who established his sovereignty through Truth.[201] In Mandaeism, "truth" ࡊࡅࡔࡈࡀ kušṭa is an element closely related to the first creation. It is the "heavenly" oath which every Mandaean has to take during baptism:[202]

> In great radiance am I immersed and in resolute light am I established. Manda baptized me; kušṭa (oath) confirmed me.[203]

As to the relation between the Mandaean Mana and the Iranian "Vohu-Mana", Lady Drower points out:

> The "mana" is the eternal part of the human soul which when freed of earthly pollution is re-united to the Great Mana. The Great Mana seems to correspond to the Zoroastrian Vohu-Mana, and represents a Cosmic Intelligence or Supersoul.[204]

In Zoroastrianism the Vohu-Manah (the good mind) is in a struggle with Aka-Manah (the evil or bad mind), and at the end Vohu-Mana will prevail.[205] In the Mandaean literature the mana represents intelligence or the mind, from which the whole of existence came into being. The only occasion where we come across evil

manas in the Mandaean literature is in the journey of the messenger Hibil-Ziwa to the underworld, where first met Rūha, and when he descended further, Hibi-Ziwa encountered the two spirits of Darkness which were called manas:

"I went (downwards) and I found those two great Manas of Darkness." [206]

The great, secret first Mana concealed himself in his škina for nine hundred and ninety nine millions (?) of years before he became manifest and initiated the existence, as we read in one of the hymns:

> I worship, laud and praise that great, secret, First Mana who dwelt for nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand myriads of years alone in his on škina – for no companion came to him; save that great, secret First Mana. For he came into existence therein and developed therein. [207]

During this endless time of the Mana's "incubation" in his škina "cocoon", the whole being was inert and the whole of existence was in oblivion. Nothing existed until the Great Mystic Mana decided to emanate from himself and with him three hundred and sixty-six mighty celestial world of light came into being and shone:

> I worship, laud and praise that Mystic First Mind (Mana) of Glory, who emanated from Himself, whose brilliance exceeds all (other) mystic glories; it is greater than word of mouth (can describe) and his light mightier than lips can express for He is the Mana (Mind), the great, the mysterious, the First of Glory, the great mighty Mana, in the radiance of which banner three hundred and sixty-six mighty celestial worlds of light shine.[208]

With the Great Mana's manifestation, existence came into motion and all the worlds gained power and the lamps and lights started to glow.[209] Lady Drower explains this move as follows:

> By the first creative impulse, when the Great Life became active and "Non-Existence" became "Existence", assumed an anthropomorphic shape.

The explanation of this is given by Naṣiruta in theological rather than metaphysical language.[210] She established her statement by referring to one of the hymns:

> In the name of the great powerful Mana (Mind) who thought and evoked companionship of Itself and said, "There shall be companionship for Me". [211]

Nevertheless, the Great Mana has no share in the creation of the material world. He remains ࡍࡅࡊࡓࡀࡉࡀ nukraia an "unknown", "unperceivable". 'The alien is that which stems from elsewhere and does not belong here.'[212] The worlds and generations cannot comprehend his nature and the nature of his counterpart:

> Then he taught about the Mana (Nous or Intelligence) and its Counterpart, for the world and generations know them not – that they correspond to that which comes from the (brain) matter and the vision of the heart (inner vision) that is within them.[213]

[213] ATŠ p. 174. Plotinus, (3rd century C.E.), portrays the real lord of the universe is an unknown "otherworldly", "alien" god who dwells beyond all visible creation. The Secret Book of John describes him as "The [true] God, the Father of the All, the Holy [Spirit], the invisible,

Mandaean literature describes the Manas as pure mass of radiance and light. No one can behold their images because their radiance is blinding the eyes and their light is dazzling. When Manda ḏ-Hiia brought Hibil into the presence of the Manas, he was afraid of their immense radiance and clear light:

> He aroused, went and led him (Hibil) into the presence the Glorious Manas. When Hibil, the fore-ordained Mana, entered he was startled because their radiance was transcendent and their light was overwhelming. He was not able to behold their images because their radiance was colossal and their light was enormous.[214]

When the messenger Hibih-Ziwa returned from his journey from the World of Darkness to the World of Light, the Mana and his Counterpart ࡌࡀࡍࡀ ࡅࡃࡌࡅࡕࡄ mana udmuth̲ received him and welcomed him. In order to receive full purification he descended towards the First Jordan "of the Mana and his counterpart" and his father (Manda ḏ-Hiia) baptized him and pronounced secret ࡓࡅࡔࡌࡉࡀ rušmia (signs) over him.[215]

The following verse is one of the most beautiful verses in the Ginza which is recited at the initiation of a new priest. The Mana speaks about his dwelling in the sea until wings were formed for him. At the moment he became a winged creature, he spread his wings and flew towards the Place of Light:

> I am a great mana, a mana am I, a son of the Great Ones. I dwelt in the sea, in the sea I dwelt until wings were formed for me, until for me who is over the all, who exists in his imperishability, since he [is in] the pure light into which no eye may look" (Rudolph, 1983: 61, 62 and 63). Lady Drower in her argument against those who claim that neo-Platonism influenced Naṣoraean gnosis directly or indirectly raises the following question: "As for the possibility that neo-Platonism influenced Naṣoraean gnosis directly, and 'directly' should be stressed, why the Naṣoraeans adopted the word Mana for the Creative Mind instead of the Greek νοῦς (Nous)?" (SA p. 46) She emphasizes that "The word used for "Mind", mana is not in the sense Semitic but Iranian" (SA p. 2).

> wings were formed, until I became a winged creature. When I became a winged creature I spread my wings for the Place of Light.[216]

The above verse reminds us of the Ōannēs[217] legend which was written in Greek by the Babylonian priest Berossus. He described Ōannēs as having the body of a fish but underneath the figure of a man which dwelt in the Persian Gulf. He rose out of the waters in the daytime furnishing mankind with instruction in writing, the arts and the various sciences. Mead believes that Ōannēs' revelation is fundamental among the Mandaeans and it might be related to the Redeemer of the world, the Celestial Man who is expected to rise from the heart of the ocean, as it is written in the Apocalypse of Ezra.[218]

> The Mana is the crystal crown which crowns the head of the Great (Life):
> The Mana spoke to the generations: "I am a crystal crown. A crystal crown I am, which crowns the head of the Great (Life)."[219]

In addition to Mana, the heavenly being, there is the mana in the sense of ࡍࡉࡔࡉࡌࡕࡀ nišimta soul; the hidden sparkle of light. When Ptahil created Adam he could not make him stand on his feet. He, therefore, had to fetch a hidden mana (soul) from the House of Life and cast it into the bodies of Adam and his wife Eve.[220] This being of light mana (soul) had to sojourn in the ࡔࡐࡉࡍࡆࡀ špinza "inn" (the human body) against its will.[221] Because of this imprisonment (in the stinking body of man), the mana (soul) laments and complains:

[217] Ōannēs – Greek form of Uan, a name given to Adapa by Berossus. "Adapa was the first of the antediluvian seven sages who were sent by Ea, the wise god of Eridu to bring the arts of civilization to mankind" (Dalley 2000: 183).

[218] Mead's comment in this concern is notable; he writes: "Indeed the Fisher-figure cannot fail at once to remind students of the comparative science of religion of the ancient Babylon fish-clad fisher-god H̱ani-Ōannēs – the archaic Ea, father of Marduk the saviour god of Babylon who rose early from the dead." (See also Brandt, 1889: 148 ff.) This primeval God of Wisdom was the culture-god who had taught early mankind all the arts of civilization. Berossus, the Chaldaean priest (281 B.C.E.) who wrote Babyloniaca in Greek for Antiochus I, tells us of no less than six manifestations of Ōannēs in successive periods; and this notion of revelation and saving in successive periods is fundamental with the Mandaeans. Ōannēs rose from the sea – the waters presumably of the Persian Gulf, in the old story; but Marduk, his son descended from heaven (Mead, 1924: 17, see also Pallis, 1926: 47).

The lamentation of the mana (soul) is the main theme of GRL book 2, and bears the characteristics of the lamentations of ancient Mesopotamia:

> "I am a Mana of the great Life I am a Mana of the mighty Life. Who has made me live in the Tibil, who has thrown me into the body's trunk?" [223]
> "For a long time I have endured and been dwelling in the world" [224]
> "A Mana am I of the great Life. Who has thrown me into the suffering of the worlds, who has transported me to the evil darkness?" [225]

On the other hand, it is through the sacrifice of the mana or the nišmta (the soul) the World of Light could defeat the World of Darkness:

> O, nišimta soul rise and go and enter inside the body and be a prisoner inside the Palace. The rebellious Lion will be captured by you, the grim furious Lion. The Dragon will be captured by you, and killed in on the

The Aramaic etymology of mana is: "vessel", "utensil", "garment" "clothing", and "instrument". [227] The Mandaean priests give four meanings for the word mana. (a) the soul, (b) a dove, (c) a garment, (d) a house.[228] The Mana is the instrument in which the Mana and his companion hid themselves in order to create the new generation of Life. It appears in plural forms in the following text:

> I bowed to and prostrated myself to my companion, and I received from her the precious kušṭa. We entered the mania (instrument) and concealed our selves. And she agreed to be my consort.[229]

The second occurrence of mana in the plural form mania is the Mandaean ceremony Ahaba ḏ-Mania (the presentation of garments [a form of zidaq brika] for those who have died not wearing the ritual garment - rasta).[230]

In ATŠ we read that the Mana is the Great Radiance, the translucent heavenly teacher who teaches the Naşoraeans the sacramental rites (treasures). The messenger Hibil-Ziwa appeals to the Great Mana, the Lord of all worlds, to explain to him the perfect rites, as without them no healing (asuta) of baptism in the Jordan will be bestowed on the Naṣoraeans and their robes will be debased and their crowns will fall from their heads.[231]

§ 2.1.4 - ࡉࡀࡓࡃࡉࡍࡀ yardina (Jordan):

Ritual immersion of the Mandaeans requires running or flowing water "rivers" which fits with the aquatic and marshy environment of southern Mesopotamia. The Mandaeans call all rivers and streams "jordans", and the Jordan, in their belief, is a terrestrial river "descended from the celestial world by way of the mountains." [232] The Jordan of the pure (white) waters originates from the Great Mana who dwells in Great Ether of Life.[233] The heavenly Jordan is not only the link between the World of Light and the physical world, but also functions as the conduit which pours from the World of Light in order to purify mia siauia, the black lifeless waters of the earth.[234] The black waters encircled the circumference of the world remained turbid,[235] until the Great Life ordered the Savior Manda d̲-Hiia to draw a channel of Living water and let fall into the black waters:

> Arise, you, and depart towards the watersheds. And draw a tiny channel > of living water and let it fall into the turbid waters and (then the waters)

[232] MII p. XXV. Segelberg has no "reason to doubt that the word ירדנא Jordan refers to the well known river with same name", but he adds that "Euphrates replaces Jordan occasionally". He also refers to scholars who believe that the Mandaeans are of Western origin, and that they have adopted, besides Jordan, Euphrates as a sacred river since their settlement in Mesopotamia (Segelberg, 1958: 38).
[233] GRR book III p. 84: 5.
[234] For this reason, the Mandaeans consider the yardina Jordan (running water) sacred, therefore, no Mandaeans may urinate or spit in a river, nor can it be used to dispose of sewage.

Without the "Living Water" of the Yardina (Jordan) purifying the Mandaeans, their nišmata 'souls' would remain confined to this world; the World of Darkness, and could never return to the World of Light.[237] The Jordan cleans all faults and the trespasses and is the father of all worlds, celestial, central and lower: it is a medicine transcending all means of healing.[238] The healing powers of "the great Jordan of the First Life, which is all healings" [239] correspond to the magical healing powers of the Jordan, which healed Namaan, the captain of the host of the king of Syria from his leprosy, stated in the Old Testament.[240]

Without the baptism (immersion) in Jordan (running water) one cannot receive the pure sign and therefore he cannot be a Mandaean:

> "In the name of the Life! Let every man whose strength enables him and who loves his soul, come and go down to Jordan and be baptized and receive the Pure Sign; put on robes of radiant light and set a fresh wreath on his head." [241]

[240] Kings II 5-16. Lady Drower does not believe that yardina (Jordan) has any connection with the river Jordan in Palestine, and that the Mandaeans call all rivers by Ardana or Ardan (MII n. 4 p. xxiv). On the other hand, Pallis insists that yardina Jordan cannot be translated as 'the river' since yardina Jordan is always a proper name in Mandaic literature (Pallis, 1926: 24).

[241] CP p. 13. Mandaean Maṣbuta (Baptism) p. 60. Drower's translation, text collated:

Mandaean maşbuta (baptism) in the yardina d̲-mia hiia 'the Jordan of Living Water' is the unification with the World of Light. According to the Mandaeans, the baptism which takes place in the earthly world is a replica of the heavenly baptism carried out by the beings of Light. It was performed to purify Hibil-Ziwa in the heavenly yardina (Jordan) from the pollution with which he was polluted during his journey to the underworld.[242]

Baptism protects the Mandaean against evil and seals him physically and spiritually by the seal of Life: "These souls who are descending to the Jordan will be sealed by the seal of the seal of the Mighty Sublime Life." [243] The running water is not only for healing the body and purifying the souls, but also "the symbol of the fertilizing male principle" in the Mandaean literature, e.g. Earth is "the Mother" and Rain or River "the Father".[244]

> For Jordan is a baba (father) and the Earth a mother whose name is (mamma) [245]

Stroumsa writes: "Gnostic water imagery made use of biblical themes: 'The water of the Jordan is the desire for sexual intercourse' [Testim. Truth 31:1-3]."[246] This phrase is quite compatible with the Mandaean imagery, where the Mandaean literature credits the origin of the sexual desire to the Living Water and to the messenger Hibil-Ziwa:

> I went towards two legally joined persons. I came and opened living waters and gave to the pair of this world to drink. I opened living water and gave of them to the bridal pair of this world to drink. I sowed in them pregnancy and birth and with sexual desire I enflamed them and caused love to dwell in both of them.[247]

It is interesting to note that Marcionites (a heretical sect founded in C.E. 144 at Rome by Marcion) had launched a surprising attack upon John and the baptism in the Jordan and called him: "Archon of the multitude":

> "The river of Jordan, this, to him, is the strength of the body – that is, the essence of pleasure; and the water of Jordan is the desire for carnal co-habitation." As for John, he is "the archon of the multitude" [248]

According to the Mandaean manuscript ࡄࡀࡓࡀࡍ ࡂࡀࡅࡀࡉࡕࡀ haran gawaita 'Inner Haran', John the Baptist (iahiah yuhana) was born when his old barren mother ࡏࡍࡉࡔࡁࡀࡉ 'enišbai 'Elizabeth' became pregnant with him when she drank a sip from the Jordan. As a result the seed of John was sown in her womb:

[248] Doresse, 1960: 220. In this concern Jonas writes: "This is entirely unique. Could it be a retort to the Mandaeans – the other side of the bitter quarrel of which we have the Mandean side in their writings? The account is too sketchy to permit more than the suggestion of this tempting possibility" (Jonas, H., JR, 1962: 265).

> sown in the womb of 'Nišbai, so that from it a child might come into being, a prophet of the great Father of Glory." [250]

It seems that the Mandaeans follow the Sumerians, who did not always differentiate between "'semen" and "water"; the same word can stand for both. It is Enki who fecundates and produces productivity: "O Father Enki, go forth out of the seeded country, and may it sprout good seed!"[251] To the above Sumerian concept of fertility we find striking parallels in Mandaean literature:

> For Earth called Jordan (living water) "My father" when its mysteries fell into her. And she cried aloud to Jordan "Do not penetrate me" and said to it "Answer me, my father, answer me" and "Raise me up, (O) great Son of the Great One, father of a son of Life! Answer me, Šilmai and Nidbai, lords of the Jordan". [252]

The Mandaeans consider the Living Water, which originates in the world of Light, is the Life itself which flows from the House of Life in which Mandaeans lustrate their bodies and souls:

> In the name of the Life! Water of Life art thou! Thou art come from the Place which is life-giving and art poured forth form the House of Life. (At thy) coming, Water-of-Life, from the House of Life, the good come and refresh themselves, (but) the wicked are discomfited and the children of (this) world abashed.[253]

Albright finds in the above Mandaean hymn a striking resemblance to the Assyrian egubbû incantations: "In the name of life! Ye are the living waters, which have come from a wide place, Lady Drower states, 'Today the word yardina (Jordan) is applied not only to running water used in baptism and immersion, but to any flowing stream; yet the conjunction of John the Baptist and the Jordan is significant. §2.1.5 - ࡔࡊࡉࡍࡀ Škina (celestial dwelling):

ࡔࡊࡉࡍࡀࡕࡀ škinata has its usual ambiguity as the other Gnostic Mandaean terms. In creation it is meant to be the celestial dwelling, but it is also used as the cult-hut in which the Mandaean rites take place. The škinata or 'ndruna is a booth built of reeds and intertwined with myrtle and roses.[255] It is where the priest sits and from which he performs his duties like the marriage ceremony. The worldly škina used in the rituals is a reproduction of the škina of the World of Light. It is through the škina that Mandaeans can experience the Divine Godhead.

The ࡔࡊࡉࡍࡀࡕࡀ škinata (celestial dwellings)[256] are the product of the first emanation and they became the celestial abode of the Mandaean deities; "the Life", the Mana and their uthras. The škina was founded by the Life above the tanna in the great Jordan "Piriawis":

> like the glory flaming in the ࡕࡀࡍࡀ tanna (matrix?). When Life was [256] Cf. שכינה The biblical Hebrew word for Tabernacle miščan, is used in the sense of dwelling-place in OT, Psalm 132:5 "Before I find a place for God, mishcanot (dwelling-places) for the Strong One of Israel" (עד אמצא מקום ליהוה משכנות לאביר יעקב). In Talmudic literature, the Shekhinah is God himself (Sholem G., 1962: 163). Quispel believes that there is a close connection between the Shekhinah in Jewish Mysticism and the Mandaean concept of Adam Qadamaia "the primordial Man" (Quispel G., "Ezekiel 1: 26 in Jewish Mysticism and Gnosis", Vigiliae Christianae, Vol. 34, No. 1, (Mar. 1980), pp. 1- 13, esp. p. 3).

> ardent and life burst forth in the great glory which flamed therein,
> Life arose and founded its škina above the tanna.[257]

Enormous and countless myriads of škinas came forth from the fusion of the Great Mana with the Pira.[258] The škinas, with their illuminating light and magnificent radiance, are the symbol of the Divine might and glory:

> Then the Lord of Greatness Mara-ḏ-Rabuta stood and created four hundred and forty four škinas to his right, and three hundred and sixty škinas to his left. Then, he created from every škina one thousand and eight hundred thousand myriad ruban precious and sublime uthras. Their radiance is magnificent and their light is illuminating. Their precious illumination lights up the Lamps that shine before them. Two guards are posted upon every single škina and two lamps are lit in front of them.[259]

The škina, just like the other Mandaean elements of creation, is enclosed with mystery which no one can comprehend its entity:

> He is the Kušṭa (Truth) who lives in upper heights, the Lord of Greatness, Lord of all mighty beings.[260] There is no one to define and express his force and all his worlds and his škinas, in which the uthras and melki "kings" dwell.[261]

In another hymn, the Škina appears to be the "divine abode" in which the Great Mana "cocooned" himself before revealing himself to the worlds. The idea appears to be that the Great Mana has its period of quiescence, ceasing to be. [264] He became manifest only when He was fully developed in his Škina:

that great, secret, First Mana. For he came into existence therein and developed therein.[265]

The škinta which is constructed by the Mandaean priests in the Bit Manda (The House of Mandaeans or: Mandaean Temple) is the reflection of the heavenly škina in which all beings of Light dwell. In the process of consecration of a ašualia (a Mandaean novice for priesthood), has to enter a newly-built ࡔࡊࡉࡍࡕࡀ škinta (a cult hut), and the ࡏࡍࡃࡓࡅࡍࡀ 'ndruna (booth constructed for ritual purposes such as marriage and initiation) which symbolizes his former lay status is pulled down. The earthly škinta, with the Mandaean priests sitting in it practicing their rituals, symbolizes a particular realm within the divine world. It is the Mandaean sacred and pure dwelling, in the earth Tibil, which belongs to the World of Light:

> Praised be that great occult First škinta (abode) because it is Mine. Praised be the three hundred and sixty škinata (abodes), the three hundred and sixty worlds, ours, because they are worlds of light amongst which all mysteries are shared out – they emanated from the supreme and Celestial World.[266]

The škinata are the celestial dwellings for the countless battalions of 'uthras; the "warriors" of the realm of Light. These škinata are hidden from men in the World of Light.[267]

The earthly škinta is an oblong and with a pent-roof reed hut plastered with washed clay. When the škinta is constructed (always constructed nearby a stream of running water), seven priests are gathered together and recite the devotion prayers (rahmia). During this ceremony, the holy books are set in and the banners are unfurled.[269] The škinta is purified every year at the festival of the five days of creation (Paruaniia).[270] After its purification and consecration only priests are allowed to enter.[271] "In the škinta the ašualia (novice for priesthood) lives for seven days and nights, leaving it only to relieve himself." The main purpose of the earthly škinta is the consecration of a new priest and performing the masiqta (ascension) rituals. Lady Drower believes that Mandaean škinta is related to 'the sanctuary of a Nestorian church,'[274] while, in the Talmudic conception, the Shekhinah represents God's dwelling and glory in the created world.[275]

§ 2. 2. - The Second Account of the Theogony

§ 2. 2 - The Second Account of the Theogony:

In the second account of theogonay (GRR book III p. 84: 14 ff) In addition to the previous Gnostic terms, mentioned in the first version of creation, we come across new terms in the second version; yura (radiance), hiia tiniania (the Second life) and hapiqia mia (the streams of water). Some of these terms are peculiar and difficult to understand and Yura is one of them. The main events in this account are: (a) The creation of the yardina rba "Great Jordan" (b) The Life is born from the great Jordan (c) The Life addresses Itself (or: Himself) with a request and begets the Second Life (d) The Second Life calls forth uthras and sets up škinas and creates his own Jordan (e) Three uthras come into being and address a request to the Second Life to grant them permission to raise škinas for themselves. What the three uthras requested from the Second Life was granted to them:

> When the fruit was still in the fruit, when the Ayar (ether) was still in the Ayar, and when the great ࡉࡅࡓࡀ Yura (Radiance), whose ࡆࡉࡅࡀ ziwa radiance and ࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ nhūra light are so vast and extensive, before which no one existed, and from which the great Jordan of living water came into being. The water flowed to the earth of ether on which the Life sat, and the Life presented himself in the likeness of the great Mana, from which he came into being, and the Life addressed himself with a request. By the first request an eternal uthra came into being, whom the Life called ࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡕࡉࡍࡉࡀࡍࡉࡀ hiia tiniania 'the Second Life'. Countless and endless ࡏࡕࡓࡉࡀ uthras also came into being. From the Life a Jordan ࡉࡀࡓࡃࡉࡍࡀ yardina came into being, which like the first Jordan flowed into the earth of light, and the Second Life stood (or: baptized) in it. And that Second Life called forth uthras and set up ࡔࡊࡉࡍࡀࡕࡀ škinas and called forth a Jordan, in which the uthras were set up (or was baptized).

> Three uthras came into being, who addressed a request to the Second Life; they were then allowed to produce škinas for themselves. What the three uthras requested from the Second Life was granted to them. They consulted together and produced škinas. They petitioned and spoke to their father; they asked their father and said to him: "Are you the one who created this Jordan of living water, which is so marvelous and whose aroma is so fragrant, and the uthras which were established (or: baptized) in it and which are so great, and are they your uthras which were established (or: baptized) in it?" The Second Life replied, speaking to the three uthras: "As for me, your father, the Life created me, and the Jordan belongs to the Life, and you are brought into being by the power of the Life.' Then they spoke to him: 'Give us of your radiance and your light and of that which surrounds you and we shall depart and go below the streams of water ࡄࡀࡐࡉࡒࡉࡀ ࡌࡉࡀ hapiqia mia, call forth škinas for you, establish a world for you, and may the world belong to us and to you." (Chart II)

§ 2. 2. 1 - ࡉࡅࡓࡀ Yura:

Yura is one of the beings of Light in the Mandaean theogony, but the Mandaean writings do not provide us with sufficient account of him. The Mandaic Dictionary defines him as: Iur, iura (< יוהרא) light, brilliance, being of light.[276] He is a spirit of light and, the treasurer who lives with his ࡃࡌࡅࡕࡀ dmuta (counterpart) in their škina. Yura or Yur describes himself:

> I am Yur son of thou-art-bright". [277] "I am Yur son of Barit (I shone forth). In great effulgence the radiance glowed (with heat?). The tanna (vapour or: matrix) dissolved and a škinta came into being, a škinta came into existence and was established in the House of Life.[278]

Due to the paucity of Mandaean writings concerning Yura Rba, we can not determine his real purpose. The Ginza describes him as ࡂࡀࡍࡆࡉࡁࡓࡀ ganzibra. Ganzibra bears dual definitions: a 'Treasurer' and also the title for a Mandaean (bishop) which the ecclesiastical rank above that of tarmida (priest):

> Instruct them concerning Sidar-Kasia-Anana
> inside which the Treasurer, Yur Rba, is concealed. [279]

The following warning which is written in the Ginza and directed to perverse Naşoraeans (Mandaeans) confirms the role of yura as a treasurer:

> The secret treasure will be taken away from them (from the impious Naşoreans) and will be handed over to Yura Rba, the treasurer. He (the impious Naşorean) will be removed from Light and will burn in the lower hell. [280]

The Ginza also tells us that yura rba, like the other spirits of light, has a dmuta (counterpart) who lives with him:

> They provided him with hidden words, so sublime and transcendent to the world. They instructed him concerning Yura Rba and his magnificent dmuta (counterpart) who (cohabits) with him. [281]

In one of the prayers, Yur Rba is invoked as a redeemer. Here he is described not only as the ganzibra (treasurer) but also as "king of worlds of light":

Other Mandaean writings call him mystic. In the following hymn yura is classified with šalmai and nadbai, the great guardians of the Mandaeans' sacred rivers:

> You will behold the great mystic Yura whom they planted. You will see Šalmai and Nidbai dwelling in a great cloud of light. In that cloud they dwell and put in charge of all jordans. [283]

Finally Lady Drower states, "As Yura is unusual as a form of Yur it is tempting to consider יורה "the first rain", "spring, "early season". [284]

§ 2. 2. 2 - ࡄࡉࡉࡀ hiia The Life:

The Life is the supreme deity in the Mandaean belief. He is usually described as nukraiia "alien", "remote", "ineffable" since nobody has ever seen His brilliance and glory ࡃࡀࡍࡉࡔ ࡋࡃࡌࡅࡕࡄ ࡋࡀࡄࡆࡄ ࡋࡆࡉࡅࡄ ࡅࡀࡒࡀࡓࡄ d̲-'niš ldmuth̲ lahzh lziuh̲ u'qarh̲ [285]. He is the source of all existence both seen and unseen; He is the creative force that came into came into existence before the existence:[286]

> Thou art enduring, First Life before Whom no being had existence, Unearthly One [Alien] from world of light, Supreme being that art above all works, above the Ancient Radiance and above the First Light; above the life which emanated from Life and above the Truth [kušṭa] which was of old in the Beginning. The Life originated from the land of Light and the water came into being from the Life. From the water radiance emanated, and from radiance light emanated, and from the light uthras came into being:

> The Life knows that life came into being on the land of Light and from the Life, the water came into being, and from the water, the radiance came into being, and from the radiance, the light, and from the light, the uthras came into being, who are standing and praising the Life.[288]

"The Great Life is a personification of the creative and sustaining force of the universe, but the personification is slight, and spoken of always in the impersonal plural, it remains mystery and abstraction. The symbol of Life is the "living water" yardina "Jordan." [289]

The World of Light came into existence through a series of emanations form the First Life.[290] As soon as the First Life ࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡒࡀࡃࡌࡀࡉࡉࡀ hiia qadmaiia arose from his škina he created three hundred and sixty Jordans and appointed two guards upon each of them . . . then he created three hundred and sixty worlds of Light. [291]

The First Life was the first "Creator" in the World of Light when he addressed himself with a request and brought the Second Life (Yōšamin) into being.[292] In another fragment of the Ginza we read that the First Life declared to the great supreme Mana that he thought carefully and created a son. The Mana asked the Life to clothe the son with the attire of radiance and to cover his head with turban of light:

> The First Life bowed in worship and praised that great supreme Mana and said to him, "I thought and created one son; the unique great righteous one, who came to being from the unique great righteous one." He (the great supreme Mana) said to Him (to the First Life), "Go, dress him with the attire of radiance and cover his (head) with the good pure turban of light." [293]

The "First Life" is the main Mandaean revealed deity who is entitled of worship.[294] He participates in the positive aspect alone: it is nukraiia "beyond", alauia kulhun ubadia "above all creation", balma d̲nhūra "in the world of light".[295] In baptism every Mandaean must receive the Pure Sign ࡓࡅࡔࡌࡀ ࡃࡀࡊࡉࡀ rušma dakia; the Sign of Life ࡓࡅࡔࡌࡀ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ rušma d̲-hiia. Most of the Mandaean hymns and prayers open and end with the following formulae: ࡁࡔࡅࡌࡀࡉࡄࡅࡍ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡓࡀࡁࡉࡀ bšumaihun d̲ hiia rabia "In the name of the Great Life", ࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡆࡀࡊࡉࡍ hiia zakin "Life is victorious".

The Mandaean adaptation of Life as their main deity is derived from their own habitat in southern Iraq. The quest for life is a major theme in the Epic of Gilgamesh and of Mesopotamian incantations.[299] The ritual customs of the Mandaeans, as well as in the ancient Mesopotamian religion, are influenced by the idea of 'life' and how to reach the House of Life in order to gain eternal life. [301] Book III of the Ginza (the subject of the research) does not mention Yōšamin as the other epithet of the Second Life. Yōšamin is mentioned in the rest of the Ginza. called the Second Life, also uthras without limit or count came into being.[304]

The Second Life played the most important role in the creation of the semi-physical world (the world which is located beneath the World of Light). As soon as he came into existence, the Second Life became obsessed with the thought of creation[305]. He incurred the great schism in the World of Light when he allowed the three uthras (his sons, especially Abatur) to go down below ࡄࡀࡐࡉࡒࡉࡀ ࡌࡉࡀ hapiqia mia the "streams of water" (the waters that separate the world of light from the world of darkness) and create their own world and ignore the name of the Life.[306]

The Second Life's creation of a new world was considered by the World of Light as an evil act of rebellion which "instigated the Great Controversy, never to be resolved in all eternity"[307]. Yōšamin "revealed the secret of the Great Ones" and threw controversy into the Light.[308]. The Mandaean faith dictates that the world (which was created by Yōšamin) is the source of all evils and all errors and deficiency is the product of a "divine tragedy" caused by Yōšamin.[309] Some Mandaean writings recount that all error and deficiency originated when Yōšamin came into existence and it is he who caused the 'discord' in the World of Light.[310] For his insolence, the Second Life was cast down from his throne and was bound with a chain in order to stay eternally in it:

Cf. the Syriac writer Theodore Bar Konai's (8th/9th Century C.E.) story about a certain Battai whose doctrine dictates: 'Before the beginning of all things, there had been divinity who divided himself into two and from whom the Good and Evil came to be, the Good gathered-together the lights, and the Evil the darkness. Then the Evil gained understanding, and rose to make war upon the Father of Greatness. The Father of Greatness pronounced a word, from which were borne seven powers. But seven demons set themselves up against the Lord God and against the Powers he had engendered: after having shackled these adversaries, they stole from the Father of Greatness the principle of the soul (Doresse, 1960: 60).

Cf. the second series of gods who pleaded their Father for a new emanation to set the cosmos in motion, according to the Manichaean system (Gardner and Lieu, 2004: 15). > "Yōšamin was cast down because he wanted to instigate a fight and throw controversy into the House of the Great Ones. He imagined evil; therefore he was bound with a chain in order to stay eternally in it."[311]

In draša d-yahia (the Book of John or the Book of Kings) we read that a great 'angelic' war took place in the World of Light between the forces of the Life on the one hand and Yōšamin and his allies on the other. Yōšamin lost the war; his sons were killed in the resistance, and his wives went around in mourning. His yardinia (Jordans) were disturbed and his škinas were removed out of their place. They destroyed his dwellings and his buildings, and his throne was placed at the gates of Supat (underworld).[312]

After the tragedy Yōšamin came back to his senses; he repented and asked to be baptized and the name of the Life to be placed upon him:

> "I want acknowledge by your baptism and your name to be expressed and placed upon me."[313]

The Great Life was pleased with this result and restored Yōšamin's status. The World of Light promised Yōšamin to restore his škinas and buildings and to bring back his sons to him alive and to appoint messengers and guards in his domain. His throne to be erected firmly and he is to be called the King of the Škina:

Your throne is to be erected firmly, as it was, and you are to be called a king in your škina". [314]

On the other hand, the Second Life "Yōšamin" is considered by the Mandaeans as the "archetype of a priest careless in rituals".[315] Yōšamin is the neglectful priest in the World of Light.[316] ATŠ directs a clear warning to the priest who does not perform the rite perfectly: "Nevertheless, exhort him (the priest) and warn him against performing rites as Yōšamin performed them." [317] In this connection Deutsch writes:

> The interplay between human and angelic priests also plays an important role in the Mandaean rehabilitation of fallen uthras such as Yōšamin, Abatur and Ptahil. According to Kurt Rudolph, at a certain point in the history of the Mandaean religion, the priestly class empowered itself and transformed what was originally a radically dualist theology into a more monistic, ritualistic system in which human priests played a greater role. An important part of this social > and theological transformation was the rehabilitation of fallen, cosmic priests such as Abatur, who were re-created in the image of the newly empowered human priests. [318]

Yōšamin and his sons Abatur and Ptahil resemble, in a way, the sinning angels of I Enoch 6-11.[319] Deutsch explains:

> The connection between the Mandaean uthras and the fallen angels is primarily, but not solely, based on their common fall from grace following an act of rebellion. Another important but less obvious parallel between the two sets of figures in that both are related to the image of a polluted priesthood. We have already seen that Yōšamin, Abatur, and Ptahil were characterized as heavenly priests who corrupted themselves by rebelling against the Great Life. [320]

In Mandaean prayer Yōšamin is the strength which guides the waters to the sea. [321] He is also mentioned in marriage songs as a light-spirit of abundance and fertility.[322] The First Life is anterior to the Second Life by six thousand myriad years and the Second Life is anterior to the Third Life by six thousand myriad years and the Third Life more ancient than any uthra by six thousand myriad years. [323] He is the pure one who abides on treasures of the waters and upon mighty celestial wellsprings of light. [324]

In some Mandaean writings Yōšamin is called the peacock:

The Sumerian and Babylonians likewise, considered the Apsū to be the underworld ocean of sweet water, from which all springs of fresh water flow.[330] We find some resemblances between hapiqia mia and the Khinvat Bridge over the abyss which the Persian soul has to cross in order to reach Mount Harā (Paradise).[331] The god Zurvān controls the path which the souls of the dead, good and bad, must traverse before they come to Khinvat Bridge.[332] Like surik ziwa (mentioned above), the good Vāy takes the souls of the blessed by hand and brings them to their appointed place.[333] On the other hand, perhaps the Mandaean hapiqia mia has a linguistic analogy to the biblical terms אפקי ים afiqe yam (channels of the sea)[334] and אפקי מים afiqe mayim (channels of water).[335]

[329] The astral ships drawn in the Mandaean scrolls resemble, with no doubt, the ancient round boats of Iraq قفة (quffa) still used in some parts of the rivers of Mesopotamia. The image of the boatman taking one to the other world is a major theme of the Gilgamesh Epic (see Dalley, 1989: 104-105).

According to the Mandaeans' tradition, the world of hapiqia mia (outflowing water) is located above the world of Abatur (the Third Life) and below the world of pure Yōšamin.[336]. When the soul departs the dead body it flies over the great white mountain Sur towards the maṭarta (purgatory). Its journey takes forty-five days during which the soul goes into the process of purification. Then Abatur weighs the soul and allow it to proceed towards the hapiqia mia, the frontier of the world of light which the soul has to traverse in order to reach the worlds of light. The water functions as a last barrier before the soul reaches her final destination, the World of Light. The masiqta (ritual of the dead) helps the ࡍࡉࡔࡉࡌࡕࡀ nišimta (soul) to cross these waters:

> And there is nothing which advances a soul but commemorations; (and there shall be no masiqta read without commemorations), for these are her helpers in light, since they cleanse her, float her over the ࡄࡀࡐࡉࡒࡉࡀ ࡌࡉࡀ hapiqia mia, Waters of Death into the Light and are her deliverers.[337]

In other writings, it is Hibil-Ziwa who saves the souls from 'Ur, the king of darkness, by pulling them out from his mouth and throw them in the Ocean of Sup to remove their sins and then leads them across and delivers them to the uthra who is in charge of the hapiqia mia:

> He takes them out from the mouth of 'Ur and throws them into the large sea of Sup, until their sins are completed. Then these souls, like white sesame thrown into living water, are then baptized with a great ࡌࡀࡑࡁࡅࡕࡀ maṣbuta (baptism), with a great baptism which baptize them and instructs them with great teachings. Then he leads them across the water streams hapiqia mia. The uthra of the water streams hapiqia mia approaches the souls, which were in affliction, and tears appear together in their eyes. He speaks to them, "You have dwelt in Tibil (the earthly world), in the dwelling of the sinner". Afterward he takes every individual by his right hand and seats him in great glory.[338]

It is worthy to note that whereas Lidzbarski translated hapiqia mia, "Wasserbächen" [339], Lady Drower stated, "I find it better to translate by a paraphrase which conveys the real meaning, hence "waters of death".[340] The Mandaeans consider

The hapiqia mia are not cut-off waters or waters of death, which Gilgamesh had to cross in his quest for immortality; they are brooks or streams, as declared by Hibil-Ziwa to his father Manda d̲-Hiia:

> I created the water streams hapiqia mia of the yardina (Jordan), in which the souls are baptized. I created the banks upon which all the souls draw near and descend to the water streams hapiqia mia.[341]

Abatur is Bhaq-Ziwa[343], the father of the uthras ࡀࡁ ࡖࡏࡅࡕࡓࡉࡀ ab d-uthria who by gazing into the ࡌࡉࡀ ࡎࡉࡀࡅࡉࡀ mia siauia (the black waters) result in the creation of Ptahil, the demiurge who creates the physical world including the ࡕࡉࡁࡉࡋ tibil (earth):

> When the Life, my Father spoke thus, Abatur arose, opened the gate (of the World of Light) and gazed into the black waters, and immediately his counterpart was formed in the black waters. Ptahil was formed and ascended to ࡁࡉࡕ ࡌࡉࡑࡓࡉࡀ bit mişria the boundaries. Abatur examined Ptahil and said to him, 'Come, come Ptahil. You are the one whom I saw in the black waters.' . . . Abatur instructed him and said, 'Arise my son, condense a condensation in the black waters.[344]

In "Secret Adam", Lady Drower writes:

> "Abatur, pronounced Awathur, is a mystery-figure and the meaning of his name uncertain. He is sometimes called the 'Third Life'. Andreas, according to W. Brandt, derived the name from old Persian words meaning 'provided with (or "possessing"). .. His ideal is Abatur Rama, the 'Lofty Abatur'. The parallel with the Egyptian weigher of souls is obvious; the Persian Meher Davar at the Chinvat (Bridge of the Requiter) [345] also weighs the deeds of souls before they may pass over into the world of bliss."[346]

Abatur rips open the lower boundary of the World of Light by gazing below the Pleroma [347] into the "black waters" and sets into motion the creation of the physical world 'matter'.[348] It is as if Abutur was enchanted with darkness just like when the light became enamored of the image of light projected from Darkness in the Narcissus motif.[349] In the doctrine of the Sabians of Harran we read a similar motif: "The soul, turned at one time, towards the matter: she fell in love with it, and burning with desire to experience bodily pleasure, wished no more to be separated from it. Thus the world was born."[350] Theodore Bar-Konai's [351] sums up the doctrine of the "Kukeans"[352], a sect which was already in existence in the middle of the fourth century:

He also writes: "The curious fact should be noted here that the technical term pleroma appears, somewhat deformed but still clearly recognizable, in the exact Hebrew translation, ha-male', "the full" or "the fullness" (Scholem, 1962: 68 - 9). In Gnostic cosmology, the Pleroma is the shining spheres of the divinity with all its powers, the non material world, the dwelling place of the spirits, the archons and aeons (Doresse, 1958: 177). The Mandaean etymology for pleroma is ࡌࡀࡋࡀࡉࡉࡀ malaiia "fullness" and ࡌࡀࡋࡀࡉࡉࡀ ࡃࡀࡋࡌࡀ malaiia dalma "fullness of the world" (MD, p. 243) ࡅࡄࡅࡀ ࡌࡋࡀࡉࡉࡀ ࡃࡀࡋࡌࡀ uhua mlaiia dalma "he (Ur, the king of darkness) became the fullness of the world or: he became the Pleroma of the cosmos" (GRR p. 99: 4).

Theodore bar Konai wrote the "Scholia", which is of a great value for research because of its reports about the Mandaeans and Manicheans (Rudoph, 1983: 20. See also Wasserstrom, 1995: 42).

On the other hand they might be the ࡒࡀࡍࡀࡉࡉࡀ qanaiia in Mandaean, are "smiths" or "potters". According to Robert Eisler, bar Konai (bar Kevani) says, 'The Dostai (followers of Dositheus, who became the leader of the disciples of John the Baptist after his death) are called in Maisan Mandaeans, in Beth-Aramajē Naşoraeans (Naşrāiā).' The "Cantaeans," quoted by Theodore as the precursors of the Mandaeans, who trace themselves to the Qenites, the group were also referred to as Καινῖται, Καιαοί etc. in the Septuagint as KENAIOI, KINAIOI, KAINAIOI, etc. Eisler believes that Bar Konai use of 'k' instead of 'q' goes back to the Greek influence (Eisler 1931: 616).

Mother of Life, and said that she made seventy worlds and twelve aeons.[353]

There are many parallels between Abatur and the similar heavenly beings in the above two tales, such as gazing into the water and seeing own image and becoming infatuated by it, and from this own image or coition with own image the cosmos (physical world) comes into being.[354] This might lead us to the conclusion that the Gnostic sects, including the Mandaeans, must have shared relatively close motifs.

Abatur was possessed with his ego and became arrogant, "He conducted himself like the Great Ones and said, 'I am the father of the uthras!'" [355] He abandoned the name which the Life gave him. He took no advice and did not perceive the turbid water and said, 'I shall call forth a world!' Abatur's rebellion was punished sternly by the higher deities. He was dethroned and expelled from the world of Light and he was assigned as the "Weigher" and judge of the souls:

> Then Hibil-Ziwa went and said to Abatur, 'Arise! set up your throne in the House of Boundaries and take over sovereignty. And sublimate that which is sound (good) from that which is base (lit. dregs) when Man's measure is full and he comes and is baptized in your Jordan, is weighed in your Scales, is sealed with your seal and rises up and dwells in your world.'[356]

§ 2. 2. 5. 2 - Abatur in the Incantations:

Abatur was invoked, along with other Mandaean deities, in few Mandaic incantations, such as in Lidzbarski's lead amulet from the third or fourth century A.D and published in 1909. He is invoked in this particular amulet to strengthen the knot[357] of the house of a certain Per Nukraiia son of Abandukt and to help him against evil doings of the planets.[358] Bhaq (another name of Abatur)[359] was conjured in bowl C (9931.4.1) to crush the power and the secret spells of Rūha against the client Duktan Purk, daughter of Bzurgunatai.[360]

Nathaniel Deutsch attempted to establish some resemblances between the Mandaic Abatur and the Jewish Metatron and to draw the attention to the "Mandaic awareness of Jewish angelogical tradition in general and of Metatron in particular is supported by the evidence of the magic bowls."[361] In this respect Wasserstrom has written: "Metatron remained alive in Mandaen magic for perhaps over a millennium."[362] Metatron (MYŢŢRWN) appears in one of the Mandaic incantations bowls (McCullough D) in which he was adjured, "In the name of Metatron HLDH who serves before the Curtain and who has compassion upon the countryside; he conjures the hundreds of fierce angels of Halahkin, who has sweetened meat for eating and wine for drinking." McCullough suggests that the writer of this incantation was influenced by the Jews and he dated the bowl 200 – 300 C.E.[363] Levene believes that the above invocation was quoted from "an unidentified Hekhalot text" and it is "an unusual but nevertheless good example of borrowing from Jewish sources".[364]

Knot sorcery was a favorite form of witchcraft, practiced in Arabia at the time of Mohammed, either to prevent evil against the client, or afflict harm on the foe. The knot is used as a powerful weapon against the forces of Darkness. Since Abatur son of Bihrat [365] is in charge of the gate of the World of Light, The Mandaeans believe that if they turn their faces, during mishaps, towards the North (the House of Abatur), and pray to the Life and to the other Mandaean deities, they receive their bless and comfort.

§ 2. 2. 5.3 - Abatur of the Scales ࡀࡁࡀࡕࡅࡓ ࡌࡅࡆࡀࡍࡉࡀ Abatur Muzania:

Abatur was chastised because he threatened the hierarchy of the World of Light when he declared clearly that he wants to be 'the king of the škinas' (the celestial abodes):

> And Abatur spoke to him (to Hibil-Ziwa): 'I want to be a king, and I want to hold the škinas!'[366]

The Realm of Light became enraged against Abatur because he created a world for his own and called himself, "Father of the uthras" without the endorsement of his Fathers:

> As Bhaq created and built, he stood and looked at this world. It was neither vast and nor great as the worlds of the Great Life. Once he looked at his world and called himself "the Father of the Uthras" ... the Place of Light was enraged against him.[367] Bhaq-Ziwa shone by himself,

He instigated rebellion against the Great Life and created the division in the World of Light, which can not be repaired:

> Abatur caused the upper cleft which cannot be filled in all eternity.[369]

As a result of his defiance, Abatur was dethroned and expelled from the World of Light and he was made him ࡀࡁࡀࡕࡅࡓ ࡌࡅࡆࡀࡍࡉࡀ abatur muzania Abatur of the Scales, who is sitting between the ࡌࡀࡈࡀࡓࡀࡕࡉࡀ maṭaratia purgatories (or: watch-houses) [370] and the worlds of light weighing souls in his scale:

Scales and then allows whoever is worthy to proceed to the world of light. Abatur protested against this decision to Hibil-Ziwa, the envoy of the higher deities, and said to him:

> This you have arranged for me, (that I was obliged to leave) my land that is lofty and my spouses who are worthy and suitable and you brought me and made me "He-of the-Scales".[372]

Abatur was degraded because he sinned against his Parents; he strove for the Low House (physical world), so he was brought down off his throne. Abatur spoke out his lament and he wondered of what happened to him:

> I said to myself, "I would be a great one; who made me an inferior one in the Tibil?"
> I said to myself, "I would be a King; who sent me to the ends of the world?"
> I said to myself, "I would be an eminent one; who placed the Scales into my hands?"[373]

We can hear Abatur protest against the World of Light's decision in the Book of John (Draša d̲-Yahia). When the King heard Abatur's, protest he became angry with him:

> "I am not a Weigher! I am an uthra from the race of the good ones. I am not a Weigher! I am the son of kings. I wish not to be placed in these black waters, and to keep impure souls from passing by me." [374]

When Abatur said this, the King became full of anger and released a call into the world.[375]

Hence, Abatur took his case to the Pure Mana and asked him the reason he was chosen to the task of the Weigher of souls out of the other uthras:

> Then Abatur spoke said to the pure Mana, 'Why have you sent me from out of all these numerous uthras? [376]

The Mana told Abatur why he was chosen for this task and comforted him:

> Out of all the škinas and uthras there is none as you are. None in all these light worlds would be as gentle as you. You are gentle and you are suitable uthra. You are generous and are to the souls as a support. You feel sympathy with the souls and you are an acceptable judge.[377]

§ 2. 2. 5. 4 - Abatur; the Persian Rašn uRast

Abatur can be associated with Rašnu the Persian god of justice and last judgement and the personification of righteousness. He was said to weigh the deeds of the soul during the three day period of evaluation following the death of an individual. Rašnu guards the Chinvat Bridge leading to heaven. He carries the golden scales with which he weighs the souls at Judgement.[378] Peculiarly, the Mandaeans' holy book Ginza Rba identifies Abatur with Rašnu:

> Abatur, the ancient, lofty, hidden and guarded, who is (in fact) Rašnu Rast.[379]

Rašnu "the Judge" weighs the actions, and then words, then thoughts; but all three contribute to total of man's good or evil.[380] The Mandaean Abatur (Rašnu) and his son Ptahil induced Zaehner to argue that this episode is derived from the Persian Zervanite myth.[381]

Abatur is the guardian of maṭarata (a purgatory or watch-house) through which the nišmata souls go through to the world of Light after being purified from their contaminations. Those Naṣoraeans (Mandaeans) who are not worthy of the House of Life will be turned away and not allowed to go through the gate of Abatur:

> When the Naṣoraeans, who are not worthy of the House of Life, reach the gate of the house of Abatur will be turned away. From the house of Abatur they will be turned away and they will not behold the place of Light. [382]

On the other hand the great gate of Abatur is open to those who are worthy of the house of Life:

> Sure and assured, armed and prepared, resplendent and beauteous (are they) when the wreath with its mysteries is set on the heads of these souls of this ascent (masiqta) to the great gate of Abatur's house. They will open to them the great gate of Abatur's house, give

It seems that Abatur was convinced to take his new office as the souls' judge who weighs the deeds and the rewards and separates nišimta the soul from rūha the spirit:

> I set forth and reached the watch-house (purgatory) of the ancient, the lofty, the occult, the guarded Abatur. I asked my brothers, the uthras, saying to them: "Whose watch-house (purgatory) is this, and who is held captive in it?" My brothers, the uthras, say to me: 'This watch-house belongs to the ancient, the lofty, the occult, the guarded Abatur. The Scales are set before him; he weighs the deeds and the rewards and unites the spirit with the soul. [384]

The Great Life explained to the proven pure one, who pleaded for Abatur, that he (the Life) cannot let Abatur's rebellious conduct to pass and he, therefore, must carry out his task as Abatur Muzania (Abatur-of-the-Scale) until the end of the world:

> For your fame's sake and Our name's sake. When he is sinning, who will (can) permit it? Who will let him be when he offends? And casts Our root into polluted waters? (One) who accepts favour from Us and then goes and casts it into the abode of the dark (powers)! [385]

§ 2. 2. 5. 5 - Abatur, the Symbol of Virility:

Since he is the father of the uthras and the creator god Ptahil, Abatur is depicted in some Mandaean scriptures as "tongue" and hypostatic "phallus"; The tongue is associated with the phallus:

> Abatur-Rama, whose name is "the Great Jordan of White Water", that he is called "the Tongue".[386] And when you pray the petition (CP p. 89 n. 80), you offer praise to the Father of Glory whose name is the Great Mind (Mana) and to the lofty Abatur whose name is "the Tongue". [387]

It is not quite clear what is meant by the "tongue" in these scriptures but Deutsch has explained that the tongue, according to the Zohar, "is considered analogous to the male organ" and "thus, as in the medieval Jewish sources, the Mandaean depictions of Abatur preserve the phenomenological link between the tongue and the phallus." [388] Deutsch also noticed, after studying question 166 in The Thousand and Twelve Questions, a number of striking parallels with kabalistic conceptions concerning the divine phallus such as the Mandaean appellation raza rba "great mystery" –referring to the phallus - which resembles the "identification of the phallic Sefirah Yesod as the "secret" or mystery in the Zohar".[389]

When Bhaq-Ziwa, who is identified with Abatur, declared himself as 'the father of the uthras' and when he begot Ptahil (the demiurge who created the cosmos) he became the symbol of the virility in the world beyond.[390] Alma Rišaia Zuṭa (The Lesser First World) describes him as the duna (penis),[391] the organ of fatherhood and as semen,[392] which is "venerated than all the mysteries":

§ 2. 2. 5. 6 - Abatur, the Heavenly Priest:

> Blessed are you, Lofty Abatur; blessed and established in your škinta > in which you sit.[394]

The Mandaean priest in his škinta surrounded by the tarmidia (disciples) and ašgandia (messengers, helpers) depicts Abatur, the celestial priest, who sits in škinta surrounded by his uthras and performs the heavenly rituals.[395] Diwan Abatur[396] is one of the most important scrolls to the Mandaean priests. It explains the Mandaean priests the journey of the soul through different maṭaratia (watch-houses or purgatories) and the relative punishment which the sinner soul receives. Other diwans, such as Alma Rišaia Rba, Alma Rišaia Zoṭa, and Malkuta 'Laita, consist of instructions and commandments to the priests and some of their texts portray Abatur as the heavenly priest such as:

[396] Diwan Abatur (DA) an illustrated manuscript includes creation myths, the journey of the soul through different maṭarata (purgatories). It was translated by E. S Drower and published by Biblioteca Aposolica Vaticana in 1950.

> And when you take the iron knife into your hand, you have placed Pthail's hand into Abatur's hand with (your) right hand. And when you take the sheep or the dove, and turn your face towards the Gate of Payer (the North) Abatur-of-the-Scales gazes upon you.[397]

Also:

> And when you signed (at) 'the House of Abatur, you cloth the soul in the seven vestures of Abatur. And when you say 'You shall go and reach "the guard-house of four beings, sons of perfection" those are the four handclasps (kušṭas) which Abatur seeks to exchange with the soul.[398]

The word 'uthras refer to the ganzivri (archbishops), just as malkia ('kings") means "priests".[399] Since Abatur is the King of the škinas,[400] he is considered a heavenly Ganzibra (archbishop) in the Mandaean belief. The crown of priesthood is the 'crown of intermediation between the worlds of light and those of matter'.[401] Kurt Rudolph stated, "Out of celestial beings come types of celestial priests; the erring and rehabilitated priest is an especially favourite theme of this kind."[402]

§ 2. 2. 5. 7 - Abatur; the Divine Secretary:

Abatur is the heavenly being who is entitled to send ࡏࡍࡂࡉࡓࡕࡉࡀ 'ngirtia letters (secret messages)[403] to the lower worlds carrying certain instructions and commandments. He also receives the letters, which are sent by the priests, with the souls after death. A good example of the commandments sent to the lower world is written in the Mandaean Book of John (Draša d̠-Yahia). It was sent to John the Baptist when he refused to baptise ࡏࡔࡅ 'išo (Jesus) because he was suspicious that Jesus will pervert the Law. After some lengthy arguments with Jesus, John the Baptist receives 'ngirta, a mandate, from the House of Abatur instructing John the Baptist to baptise Jesus:

The only outgoing 'ngirta from this world to the world of light is few drops of miša (sesame oil) transformed into a small bottle and then the bottle is sealed with clay and marked with the impression of the priestly ring (šom yawar) and the ganzibra's to-be finger nail. After reading some secret prayers the small bottle is inserted into a pocket in the dying person's rasta (official garment. (MII p. 170) The priest recites, 'In the name of the Life. Lead him down into the Jordan and baptize him, and lead him up again to the shore, and there set him. Then Rūha made herself like to a dove and threw a cross over the Jordan. A cross she threw over the Jordan and made its water to change into various colours. "O Jordan" she says, "you sanctified me and sanctified my seven sons."[404]

§ 2.2.6 - The Fourth Life ࡐࡕࡀࡄࡉࡋ Ptahil:

§ 2.2.6.1 - Ptahil; A Mandaean 'Uthra or Egyptian Demiurge?

Ptahil (the Fourth Life) is the son of Bhaq-Ziwa (Abatur; the Third Life) who begot him when he opened the gate of the World of Light and gazed into the black waters.[405] As soon as he beheld him, Bhaq-Ziwa (Abatur) summoned Ptahil-Utra, of water) to the house of Life. The 'ngirta (letter) process is well known in Mesopotamia as a legal act, and goes back at least as far as the Old Baylonian period and extends through the Neo-Babylonian period into the Seleucid era (See Greenfield J. C., A Mandaic Miscellany, JAOS 104. 1 (1984) pp. 81-85 esp. p. 82).

[404] Mead, 1924: 51. DY, p. 103.

[405] Cf. 'The Father of Light who sees his image in the water of pure light . . . One gains the impression regarding the Spirit of God who brooded over the face of the waters as related in Gen. 1: 2b.' (Drijvers, Numen, vol. 14, (1967), pp. 104-129, esp. p. 118). The idea, in most of embraced him and kissed him like a great one.[406] He bestowed names on him; names which are concealed and guarded in their place. He gave him the name "Gabr'il" the Messenger.[407] In another passage of the Ginza we read:

> Abatur arose, opened the gate (of the World of Light) and stared into the black waters; and immediately his counterpart was formed in the black waters. Ptahil was formed and ascended to the boundary. Abatur's mind examined Ptahil, and Abatur said to his son Ptahil, "Come, come, Ptahil, you are the one whom I saw in the black waters." When he beheld him in his own form, that he was clothed in his robes of every kind and colour, he undressed him and took them from him; and he clothed him in (some of) his radiance and arrayed him in (some of) his light.[408]

We might assume that Ptahil owes his name to the act of opening the gate of heavens carried out by Abatur ࡒࡀࡌ ࡄࡅ ࡀࡁࡀࡕࡅࡓ ࡅࡐࡉࡄࡕࡀ ࡋࡁࡀࡁࡀ, qam hu Abatur upihta[409] lbaba.[410] On the other hand some scholars associate Ptahil's name with ࡐࡕࡄ PTH פתח ("open", "create") and his name is the combination of ࡐࡕࡄ+ࡏࡋ pth+'il (open + god) therefore his name might mean "the god who creates" or "god creates". In this respect Yamauchi is confident that the word the Gnostic beliefs, behind creating the world by a demiurge is to estrange the Supreme Being contact with matter and 'to interpolate intermediaries between Him and the world.' (Wilson, 1958: 102).

[406] In Mandaean myths Ptahil is the son of Hibil-Ziwa and Zahrail (Rūha's sister and identified with Ištar and Venus الزُهَرة GRR book 5). He was married to her during his journey to the netherworld. He is considered the son of both Light and Darkness and therefore his creation of the physical world was unsuccessful because he himself was born of warring principles. (MII n. 5 p. 95).

Ptahil is the formation of Ptah (the Egyptian god) and El, and not from the word 'to open'.[411] In this respect Cyrus Gordon wrote: "Ptahil is composed of the Egyptian "Ptah" + Semitic "Il" and it would highlight the Egyptian component in Mandaeism as well as indicate that the name is Egypto-Semitic (signifying "Eg. Ptah = El/God")".[412] Widengren ascribes the difficulty in defining Ptahil to the fact that "god" is usually written עיל,[413] but Widengren was not aware that the guttural (ࡏ ע) occurs in Mandaic incantations in the name ࡐࡕࡀࡄࡏࡉࡋ Ptah'il פתחעיל.[414] It seems that the guttural ע ࡏ is assimilated in some Mandaean names such as ࡌࡀࡍࡃࡀ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ Manda d̲-Hiia מנדא דהייא instead of ࡌࡀࡍࡃࡏࡀ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ Mand'a d̲-Hiia מנדעא דהייא.[415]

Lidzbarski also connects this demiurge with the Egyptian creator-god Ptah.[416] Kraeling shares Lidzbarski's opinion and adds, 'pth to 'open' came to be used in the sense of 'create' but he believes that the name is not essentially Aramaic but a combination of ptah and 'il. He also refers to Bousset's argument which suggests that "the Mandaean Ptahil is in fact none other than the Iranian Yima. In support of this identification he adduces the observation that both Ptahil and Yima enter into relation with evil powers (daevas)[417], and that both experience a fall from grace by reason of this relationship."[418] Eisler points out that he finds in the angelology of the Mandaeans the remarkable interpretation of Ptah-il, i.e. the old Egyptian or Canaanite god of smithies and metal-engravers, as the creator of heaven as well as of mankind.'[419] What emphasizes Eisler assumption is that the Ginza describes Ptahil (Gabriel) as skillful (creator) as the Greek:

[418] Kraeling, 1933: 152-165. yima is the "god who is supposed to dwell beneath the earth". For more details about yima see Boyce 1975: 94. See also Zaehner 1955: 251, where yima saves man from the demons.

> And Gabriel, the messenger, is called into being, (then) he will be instructed to create the world. He will arrive and condense a condensation, and create the earth (skillfully) as the Greeks.[420]

There is a possible parallel proposed between the Mandaean Ptahil and the Egyptian god Ptah. Mercer noted that 'pth̲ sounds like the Hebrew פתח "to open" and that Ptah played an important role in the famous Egyptian ceremony of the "Opening of the Mouth", which resembles similar ceremony in the ancient Babylonia, designated to initiate an idol.[421] He also came up a very unlikely assumption when he stated: "it is neither impossible, nor even improbable, that the earliest worshippers of Ptah might have been Semites who made their way into Egypt, as others did before them and led by the god whom the called "the opener of the way"".[422] The rite of the "mouth opening" was part of the old lustration rites performed in Mesopotamia since the Third Dynasty of Ur.[423] Jonas also had no doubt that the name Ptahil, the Mandaean Demiurge, was taken from the Egyptian pantheon and "is connected with the symbolic role of Egypt as the representative of the material world."[424] On the other hand, Deutsch believes that there are considerable parallels between Abatur (Ptahil's father) and Sabaoth.[425] Both of them are enthroned on the gate of the World of Light and each one of them is related to the demiurge of the physical world: Abatur created Ptahil and Sabaoth created a host of angelic beings.[426]

[419] Eisler, 1931: 235. He makes this statement depending on the fact that the Naşoraeans (early Mandaeans) or the "keepers" of secrets are craftsmen in general (smiths, carpenters and boat-builders etc). For Ptah the Egyptian chief god of all handicraftsmen (see Budge, 1904: 500 ff.).

[421] For more details about the rite "Opening of the Mouth" see Blackman, "The Rite of Opening the Mouth in ancient Egypt and Babylonia", JEA, vol. 10 (1924), pp. 47-59.

[422] Mercer, 1949: 148-9. The Mandaeans myth tells us that Egypt was their first dwelling and from there they migrated to ṭura ḏ-madai the Mountain of the Mandai (MII p. 10). Until recently a masiqta (ascension of the soul) ritual was performed for the Egyptians drowned while chasing Moses and the Jews across the yama ḏ-suf "the Red Sea" (SA p. xv and n. 2 p. xv).

[423] Jacobsen, 1976: 124. Lady Drower noted that "Nöldke suggests a connection between the Mandaean sacramental "wafer" (pihta), and the Babylonian rites of pit pī ("opening of the mouth") and mis pī ("washing of the mouth")" (MII n. 15, p. 122).

It is worthwhile to note that all sources mentioned above represent poor scholarship and assumptions based on very insufficient evidence. Therefore, Ptahil remains a very general name type, which doesn't really tell us anything of significance about him. This is one of the many reasons why Cyrus Gordon highlighted the significance of serious researches to be conducted on Mandaeism when he wrote:

> "Mandaic should be studied in depth by several circles of scholars, of whom the Gnostics are only one. To single out one of the many other fields: Mandaic is probably the most valuable aid for the study of the Babylonian Talmud."[427]

§ 2.2.6. 2. - Ptahil; the Creator of the Material World:

Ptahil is the Mandaean demiurge who created the physical world. He received a mandate from his father, the Second Life (Abatur) commanding him to leave the "World Beyond" and descend "below" to the "place where there is no škinas or worlds" to create a world and uthras for himself like the "sons of perfection".[428] In another passage of the Ginza we read: "Abatur instructed him (Ptahil) and said, [426] Deutsch, 1999: 129.

[427] Gordon, JAOS, vol. 99, No. 3, 1979: 476.

[428] GRR, pp. 111, 112. Wilson defines the demiurge as: "god or father of all outside the Pleroma, the creator of all things psychic and hylic. He separated the two confused substances, and created things heavenly and earthly, heavy and light, higher and lower. He formed seven heavens, whence he is called the Hebdomad as their ruler, Achamoth being of the Ogdoad, recalling the archetypal Ogdoad of the Pleroma" (Wilson, 1958: 131).

"Arise, my son, condense a condensation in the black water."[429] But the Father of the Uthras (Abatur) forgot to instruct him against the odds neither equipped him with suitable means.[430] Ptahil descended below the škinas, towards the "place where there was no world". He waded in the in the filthy mud and turbid waters, but no solidification took place. He waded to his knees, to his thighs, but the waters did not solidify. Up to his first mouth (anus), up to his mouth, he stood in the water, but no solidification took place. He pronounced the name of the Life and the name of Manda ḏ-Hiia (the Gnosis of Life) and nothing happened. He cast some of the seven garments of radiance, light and glory upon the waters, but the waters remained fluid.[431]

When he sensed that the "living fire" in him changed, Ptahil engrossed in thought and decided to ascend to the Great (One) to receive the garment of the Living Flame.[432] In another passage of the Ginza, Ptahil descended to the world of his father Abatur and spoke to him, "My father, I took some of those seven garments, in which I was planted, and I entered the waters, but no earth was condensed. Then his father said to him, "O (you) sakla[433] (fool)! Take care that you do not put your self on a par with me. Take some of the seven garments of radiance, light and glory with which I clothed you and toss (some of them) into the black waters that a condensation may now take place."[434] [429] Ibid 196: 8. In the scroll of Diwan Abatur, we read another version: "Abatur spoke to Ptahil and said to him, "Go, condense a condensation, and create the worlds and create creatures. And take with you three hundred and sixty thousand demons and devils that they dig out the Light-Euphrates and heap up its two banks. Then make a world and create creatures and plant plants. Go and propagate thy world and take the demon Qardum who loosens, liberates and waters the plants" (DA, p. 11).

[431] GRR, p.413: 5.

[432] GRR, p. 112.

[433] ܣܟܠܐ sakla (fool) an epithet of the Gnostic demiurge Ialdabaoth (child of the void) or Samael (the blind god). It seems that different Gnostic confraternities used the term sakla to refer to the demiurge. The Gnostics consider themselves 'to be 'strangers,' exiled in the kingdom of Sakla, "the prince of darkness" (Deutsch 1999: 75 and Stroumsa 1984: 48, 120) For Sakla, the leader of the Fallen Angels, see Stroumsa 1984: 163. For Ialdabaoth, the Saklas who appoints seven kings over the seven heavens and five over the "chaos of the underworld" (Rudolph 1977: 79). The Saklas join the powers of Darkness to create Adam and Eve in order to entrap the elements of Light in the world through lust and the multiplication of humans (Stoyanov 2000: 110).

Though Ptahil failed in his first attempt, he succeeded, by the powers of the garments and the living flame which mingled with water and the material creation came into being. Ptahil solidified the black waters, spanned out the firmament and appointed boundaries to the worlds. When the firmament was spanned out he seized the navel of the earth and bound it to the centre of heavens. [435] Ptahil used seven ࡒࡀࡋࡉࡀ qalia "calls" in order to create the world: By his first call he solidified the earth and spanned out the heavens. By the second call he dispersed Jordans and canals. By the third he created the fish of the sea and birds of every type and variety. By the fourth he brought forth plants and seeds. By the fifth he created reptiles. By the sixth the whole structure of darkness came into being. By the seventh Rūha and her Seven planets came into being.[436] While Ptahil was engaged in creating the world, the Seven (planets) and the Twelve (sings of the Zodiac) and the Five (planets without the Sun and the Moon) stealthily climbed up and took their position in the vault.[437]

In another passage of the Ginza we read that although the process of creation was carried out by Ptahil against the wish of the Life because Ptahil threw the form, which the Second (Life) had formed, into the world of darkness and made creations and formed tribes which are not worthy of the House of Life (or: outside the House of Life),[438] the Life helped Abatur in obtaining the secret of solidification.[439] Abatur wrapped it (the secret) in his clean turban and delivered it to his son Ptahil. Ptahil went down again to the black waters and succeeded in solidifying earth and spanning out the firmament.[440]

Ptahil descendent into the black waters clad in garment of fire, and that the fire mingles with the water and the material world comes into being resembles the Zervanite myth where the male element, fire, fertilizing the female, water, in order to produce the cosmos. Zaehner believes that this Mandaean tale is derived from the same source as the Zarvanite myth, since the Mandaean religion distinguishes between two series of elements such as the living (good) fire and the devouring (evil) fire (Zaehner, 1955: 77).

[437] Some of the earlier forms of Gnosticism pointed that there was one God the Father, who created seven angels who created the world and made man in the likeness of the divine image (Wilson, 1958: 102-103).

It is notable in the Ginza that some passages describe Ptahil as an evil and a foolish creator and his house (the world) is taken from him.[441] Draša d̠-Yahia (the Book of John) tells us that he was appointed the guardian of the house until the end of the worlds.[442] In another passage from the Ginza we learn that Ptahil has been forgiven, by the higher deities of the World of Light, for creating the universe and he will be declared the king of the uthras and king of the Naşoraeans:

> Yōšamin and Abatur shall be baptized of the First Great Life in the Jordan. Afterwards Ptahil-Uthra shall be carried away from the putrid clouds in which he sits and purified in the Jordan of the First Life. In that Jordan his stench will be removed. He will be embraced by the First Life, and he will tell about the stocks and fetters which he endured in the world. He will tell about the pain which inflicted him from his father. He will be declared the King of Uthras, and will have authority upon the congregation of souls. He will be declared the King of the Naşoraeans, and prayer and praise will rise for him.[443]

§ 2.2.6.3 - The Creation of Adam:

There is more than one version in the Ginza for the creation of Adam. According to tractate 10 of the Ginza, Ptahil creates Adam according to his image with the help of the Planets. They create Adam and cast some of their spirits and some of their mysteries into him and his wife Eve but were unable to make him stand on his feet. Ptahil brings a "hidden mana" form his father Abatur and cast it into Adam and Eve. Only then Adam sneezes and stands on his feet:

> After Ptahil had created the world, he built his son Adam according to his form, and according to Adam's form Hawa (Eve) his was built. Pthail cast into Adam a kind of rūha spirit from his own rūha spirit,[444] and each of the Seven (planets) cast into Adam and his wife Hawa (Eve) some of his own mystery. However, Ptahil and Seven (Planets) who were with him could not raise Adam and his wife Hawa (Eve).[445] Therefore, Ptahil went towards his father Abatur, obtained a hidden mana, which was given to him from the House of the Life, brought it, and cast it into Adam and into his wife Hawa (Eve).... Adam sneezed and asked for the life.[446] Ptahil and the planets who were with him said to him (Adam): "Live, Adam!" Then Adam stood up, bowed down [444] Cf. 'And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.' Genesis 2: 7.

[445] According to the Apocryphon of John, the seven powers contributed from their own elements the following "souls" for Adam: the "bone-soul", the "sinew-soul", the "flesh-soul", the "marrow-soul", the "skin-soul", and the "hair-soul". Rudolph comments: "In spite of the skill devoted to the formation of the psychical body it remains immobile and it is not possible to make him stand uptight. This gives "Wisdom" (sophia) opportunity to intervene in order to win back the power which through her error she had lost to her son the Demiurge." (Rudolph, 1983: 102)

[446] An Iraqi tradition is that sneezing is a sign of life. They tell stories about people who were thought to be dead but they returned to life after they sneezed. Sneezing for them, also, is a sign of warning i.e., if a person was about to depart and someone else sneezes, he postpones his departure for some time.

and praised that man who had opened his eyes and made him stand on his feet. [447]

Tractate III (the subject of this research) of the Ginza Rba narrates the creation of Adam by Ptahil and the Planets as follows:

> When Ptahil came, he spoke to the planets: 'Let us create Adam that he may be king of the world', when he had spoken thus to them, they all consulted each other: 'Let us tell him that we want to create Adam and Hawa (Eve), because he belongs to us.' They said to him: "Come now, we will create Adam and Eve and make them the head of the whole generation." When the planets spoke thus to him Ptahil was troubled in his heart and said: 'If I by myself create Adam and Eve, the head of the generation, what will Adam (then) know what to do in the world?'[448] Then Ptahil-Uthra spoke to the Planets and said: "Adam is my son; he is the king of the world!" The Planets spoke to Ptahil saying: "What do we confide in and rely on, and what is our authority in the world?" Ptahil spoke to them and said: "You shall be his fosterer(s), and render him full service."
> They created Adam and laid him down, but there was no nišimta[449] soul in him. When they created Adam they were unable to cast a soul into him. They pleaded to Ayar-Ziqa (the ether wind) to hollow out his bones, and marrow be formed in them. That marrow be formed in them, that he might spring up and stand on his feet. They summoned ṣauta ḏšata haita the splendor of the living flame that might illuminate his attire and he might spring up and stand on his feet. They sent for habla ḏšabria the mist of the streams and the fumes of the consuming fire to enter his trunk that he might clinch his

The Planets spoke to Ptahil saying: 'Allow us to cast into him some the rūha spirit which you brought with you from your father's house.' All the Planets exerted themselves, and the Lord of the World exerted himself. In spite of all their efforts, they could not make him stand on his feet. Ptahil set off in his glory and ascended to the Place of Light. He stood in the presence of the Father of the Uthra,[450] and his father spoke to him: "What have you accomplished?" He answered him: "All that I made has been successful, (but) my counterpart and yours have not been successful."[451]

The Father of the uthras raised himself, set forth, and hurried to atar kasia the secret place. He fetched the (great) mana, [452] which illuminates all corruption. He wrapped him (the mana) in his pure turban under the (spells) of the (secret) names which the Life gave him. He brought it hither and gave it to Ptahil, his son. When he gave it to Ptahil-Uthra, the Life summoned Hibil, Šitil and Anoš[453] the outstanding uthras who are flawless. He summoned them and gave them their orders, and warned them concerning the nišmata souls. He said to them: 'You be a guardian over them, so that all the worlds may know nothing about them. Let not the muddle-headed Ptahil know, [454] how the nišimta soul falls into the body. How the soul falls into the body and how the blood fills (lit: speak in) it and how the veins permeate it. Let the supporter (maulānā) Adakas-Mana be his protector.[455] . . . Ptahil wrapped him in his pure turban, and enfolded him in his garment. When Ptahil wanted to cast the soul into Adam's trunk, I (Manda d̲-Hiia) snatched it from his pocket. While Ptahil lifted Adam up, I erected him on his bones. While he laid his hands on him, I made him breathe the breath of the Great Ones. His body filled with marrow, and the radiance of the Life spoke in him. When the radiance of the Life spoke in him, Adakas-Ziwa ascended to his place.[456] I led him upwards to the House of the Great Ones; to the place where the Great One is enthroned. I entrusted him to the ganzibras Treasurers, the uthras who look after the Jordans. The Life thanked the uthra, who had brought the nišimta soul.[457]

It is written that "the Archigenetor issues a decree with regard to that man to be formed, and each of the powers cast his seed upon the midst of the navel of the earth. From that day on the seven commanders (archons) formed the man and he was called "Adam". But this creature was left without a soul for forty days until "wisdom life" (sophia zoē) sent her breath into Adam. He began to move on earth but could not stand up.' (Rudolph 1983: 96-97) Drower noted that the unsuccessful creation of Adam "constantly appear in Gnostic, Rabbinic, and Kabalistic writings" (SA, n., 3 p. 35).

§ 2.2.7 - Manda ḏ-Hiia (Gnosis of Life)

§ 2.2.7.1 - The True Apostle of Light:

Manda ḏ-Hiia is translated "knowledge of life", i. e. "gnosis". There was a debate on his name and the analogy of "manda" led by Pallis, since "knowledge" in the Mandaean language is ࡌࡀࡃࡉࡕࡀ madita, ࡉࡀࡃࡅࡕࡀ iaduta, ࡌࡀࡃࡀ madda or ࡌࡀࡃࡉࡄࡕࡀ madihta.[458] Manda ḏ-Hiia is the outstanding figure in the Mandaean faith and the most revered deity.[459] Manda ḏ-Hiia personifies the ࡌࡀࡍࡃࡀ manda "knowledge" of the great Mandaean deity ࡄࡉࡉࡀ hiia the Life.[460] From the course which the Mandaeans followed through history, some scholars went to assume that this sect adopted Manda ḏ-Hiia as a messenger and a redeemer when the Naşoraeans (the early Mandaeans) as part of their polemic against Christianity at the rise of the first millennium.[461] Many texts in the Ginza and in the other Mandaean manuscripts propose a shift from polytheism to Gnosticism has taken place sometime in the period from C.E. 300-600 as suggested by Brandt.[462]

Support for this hypothesis comes from one of the masiqta (ascension) hymns; the believers have forsaken images, pictures, idols and gods and have testified to the name of the great strange Life:

[458] In some incantations Manda ḏ-Hiia is written with the guttural (ࡏ y) ࡌࡀࡍࡃࡏࡀ ࡖࡄࡉࡉࡀ Mand'a ḏ-Hiaa (Yamauchi 1967: 235, 241).

[459] Pallis 1926: 146. Abatur (the Second Life) rises from his throne in order to show respect to Manda ḏ-Hiia (GRR 223: 14).

[460] Rudolph 1983, 131.

[461] Brandt believed of two schools of Mandaism: the Old Mandaean School, which lost its authority because of continually new influence especially Christianity; and the New School which he called "teaching of the king of Light" (Lichtkönigslehre). This school, he believes, in contrast to the older polytheistic from, is monotheistically oriented, even when marked with dualism. Brandt came to the conclusion that "In the course of the polemic against Christianity and its influence, the "reformer" of the Mandaean theology", the author of the Lichtkönigslehre represented a revelational activity of the Mandaean redeemer in Jerusalem and assumed also the name Nāşoraean as a designation for the sect itself" (cited by Rudolph, HR, vol. 8, 1969: 211f).

[462] Rudolph, HR, 1969: 212.

> 'This hour I address to thee, my Lord, Manda d̲-Hiia, a vital petition, large and not small, for this congregation of people who have bent their knees to the ground and stretched forth their hands to the intermediate and upper (worlds). They have forsaken images, pictures and idols of clay, gods (made) of blocks of wood, and vain rites, and have testified to the name of the great, strange (sublime) Life. To them the gate of sin is closed and for them the gate of life is open. May our request, our prayer and our humble submission rise before the supreme Life which is above all works.'[463]

Manda d̲-Hiia often exchanges places with another light being, his son/brother, Hibil-Ziwa,[464] who descended to the seven layers of the world of darkness and came into conflict with the King of Darkness and obtained ࡐࡓࡅࡃࡒࡀ prudqa a "passport"[465] with ࡄࡀࡕࡌࡀ hatma a seal-impression[466] which enabled him to travel through the World of Darkness and come back to the World of Light.[467] During his journey Hibil-Ziwa could confuse Rūha (the goddess of the underworld) and obtain from her ࡂࡉࡌࡓࡀ ࡅࡌࡓࡀࡓࡀ the gimra umrara, the two secrets of the World of Darkness.[468]

[464] Hihil-Ziwa, is the light bearer; a saviour-spirit who descended to the underworld and brought back with him from the "Well of Darkness" the gimra (pearl, or: soul) and mrara (a sort of herb) which are considered the secrets of the World of Darkness. Cf. the Mandaean scroll masbuta d-Hibil-Ziwa "the Baptism of Hibil-Ziwa" (The Haran Gawaita and the Baptism of Hibil-Ziwa, translated by Drower, Vatican City, 1953).

[466] GRR, p. 169: 8.

[467] The journey of Hibil-Ziwa reminds us of the journey of Enkidu to the underworld. (GRR, book 5:1)

[468] The meaning of gimra umrara is obscure, perhaps indicating two things assuring the stability of the world of darkness (MD, p. 90).

The Mandaeans prayers recited during the rituals usually include the formula, "the name of Life and the name of Manda d̠-Hiia ("Knower of the Life") is pronounced over me." He is the "True Apostle of Light" as he describes himself:

> I am the Apostle of Light whom the Great One sent me into the world. The true Apostle I am, with whom there is no lie. The Chosen with whom there is no lie, there is not with him deficiency or fault. [469] I am apostle of Life, the true one, in whom there is no falsehood. [470]

Many Gnostic sects share the meaning of the apostle/redeemer, with some notable differences. According to the Manichaean cosmogony, the living Father sent his son to redeem the soul when he saw it suffering in the body. The son came and transformed himself into human form and appeared to men as a man. He made "creation for the salvation of souls and produced an instrument with twelve vessel; this is turned by sphere and draws up the souls of the dying. Then the great light takes them up with its rays, purifies them and passes them on to the moon and thus is filled the face of the moon . . . When the moon is full, it ferries the souls to the east. And again it fills the ferry and again it unloads as the souls are brought up by the vessels, until it has saved its own share of soul." [471]

§ 2.2.7.2 - The Creation of Manda d-Hiia

Three uthras (the sons of the Second Life 'Yōšamin') decided to descended below the hapiqia mia (streams of water) to create a world of their own and not to mention the name of the Life.[472] The Life complained to the Great Mana who dwells in the Great Pira and requested his counsel. In a countermove to the uthras' plan[473], the Great Mana created the astral messenger Kabar Rba or Kabr Ziwa, who is fact Manda ḏ-Hiia.[474] It was by the request of the First Life the 'Gnosis of Life' came into being: "I am Manda ḏ-Hiia, the emanation (lit. planting) of the Mighty First Life." [475] The Life instructed Manda ḏ-Hiia that his creation preceded the creation of the uthras and his commission was predestined.[476] In this regard, Jonas writes: "The mission of this transcendent savior begins even before the creation of the world (since the fall of the divine element preceded the creation) and ran parallel with it."[477]

Manda ḏ-Hiaa was promoted by the supreme beings of the World of Light and was made one of the Great Ones. He was given authority upon all worlds of Light and upon the uthras who dwell in the škinas and upon the underworld of darkness.[478] He was the only one worthy of the mission because he was the one who could restrain the renegade uthras and set the boundary stones (kudka).[479] He was hailed as the "great mirror of the uthras and the lustrous king of the all kings (or: angels)".[480]

[472] This is the first rebellious act in the World of Light performed by the Second Life (Yōšamin) and his three sons (one of them is Abatur). This rebellion which caused a great conflict in the Mandaic heavenly world was subdued by Manda ḏ-Hiia (GRR p. 85 ff.).

§ 2.2.7.3 - Manda d-Hiia, the Mandaean Redeemer: [481]

The Mandaeans' concept of the redeemer is not that of Christianity. The Mandaean Redeemer does not descend to earth and redeem his followers through agony and sufferings. The Mandaean salvation, like the other Gnostic beliefs, is focused on the release of the soul, the mana divine particle of man, from the material world and subsequently joins its ࡃࡌࡅࡕࡀ dmuta counterpart in the World of Light.[482] This process is materialized, according to their faith, by means of gnosis (knowing) the Life and his messenger Manda d̲-Hiia (the Knower of Life) and through the cults of repeated maṣbuta (baptism) in yardina "Jordan" [483] and masiqta (the ascension of the soul).[484] The Redeemer's duty is to awaken the souls to their heavenly origin and to provide them with necessary "gnosis" or "knowledge" to serve as "passwords" for their heavenly re-ascent.[485] Mandaeanism professed to bring salvation through knowledge; ignorance is a sin:

> Who illuminates (his heart) with illumination (knowledge) shall rise in the Place of Light; who cannot illuminate (his heart) with illumination (knowledge), shall be cut off from the Place of Light.[486]

Among the Mandaeans redeeming knowledge has been personalized in the figure of Manda d̲-Hiia.[487] The Redeemer is also "the good shepherd that leads his sheep to their fold."[488] The souls, that sinned because of the wicked angels, [illegible]

malakia, of this world, will appeal to Manda d̲-Hiia to save them from their sins and trespasses: "Manda d̲-Hiia, save us the darkness of this world in which we are cast!"[489] We also read in another passage the pleadings of the Mandaeans to Manda d̲-Hiia for the salvation of their souls: "Thou wilt raise us up as sinless and not as guilty, as virtues and not as vicious before thee, Manda d̲-Hiia."[490] It is only when the nišimta (soul) is enlightened by the "Gnosis of Life", then can return to the World of Light.[491] At the end of the world Manda d̲-Hiia shall reveal himself to sons of men and redeem them from darkness:

> A call rang out over the whole world, the splendor departed from every city. Manda d̲-Hiia revealed himself to the children of men and redeemed them from darkness into light.[492]

He is ࡁࡓ ࡄࡉࡉࡀ bar hiia the Son of Life who lifts up the souls of the faithful to the place where the Life is enthroned with his sweet voice.[493] Widengren says that the term "Son of Life" is found in the Acts of Thomas in praise of the Apostle of Life ܫܠܝܚܐ ܕܚܝܐ "Christ".[494]

Manda d̲-Hiia is identified with Hermetic Man-Shepherd (Poimandres), Mind of all-masterhood (See Deutsch, p. 1999: 166). In this respect Drower writes: "The Hermetic writings have so much which corresponds closely to religious conceptions familiar to them in Naṣoraean gnosis that they would readily have identified the Hermes of the Poimandres as their own Manda d̲-Hiia or Mara d̲-Rabuta" (SA p. 112).

§ 2.2.7.4 - Manda d-Hiia and John the Baptist:

Manda d̲-Hiia appeared to John the Baptist as a child. As a miracle, Manda d̲-Hiia caused the Jordan to flood fiercely, then made it go dry. When John the Baptist beheld the miracles he believed in Manda d̲-Hiia (as a saviour). Then, he ordered the waters to return to the Jordan. All the fish of the sea and the birds of the sky returned to Jordan, too, reciting praise to Manda d̲-Hiia. At the end of the episode John the Baptist requested Manda d̲-Hiia to save his soul. Manda d̲-Hiia released John the Baptist from his physical form and led his soul to the World of Light.[495] Strangely, we read in the Ginza and in the book of masiqta (ascension) that Manda d̲-Hiia appeared in Jerusalem: "Manda d̲-Hiia appeared to the Jews (or: in Judea) like a Vine in Jerusalem."[496] He is the one who can open the doors of kušṭa (truth), reveals the mysteries and performs miracles in Jerusalem:

> You are the healer above all means of healing, a Lifter above all Up-lifters, a Radiance above all radiances and a Light above all lights, for it is you who opens doors of truth and reveals mysteries of wisdom and shows forth miracles in Jerusalem.[497] You confide demons and devils and frighten away the gods from their high places. Great is your name and praised is your name. You are the counterpart of Life, for you were in existence before all. [498]

§ 2.2.7.5 - Manda d-Hiia the Warrior:

§ 2.2.7.5.1 - Manda d-Hiia's Weapons:

Manda ḏ-Hiaa, the valiant uthra, was the well prepared and armed apostle, who triumphed over the powers of darkness.[499] He is the heavenly warrior whom the gods in all the worlds feared: "When Manda ḏ-Hiia appeared in the whole worlds, all the gods were aghast." [500] In order to fulfill his mission against the evil, he was equipped by the Great One with the following weapons besides the army of uthras:

(1) Radiance and Light. (2) a great attire (3) the margna (staff) of Living Water (4) the wreath of the Living Flame (5) the armor of the Great Ones[501] (6) A mace (club)[502] (7) a veil (net?),[503] and (8) a robe of the great ones.[504]

§ 2.2.7.5.2 - Manda d-Hiia Restrains the Rebellious 'Uthras:

When the Second Life and his sons, the uthras, determined to create a world of their own, the Great Life considered this intention as an act of rebellion. In order to foil the uthra's plot, the Great Ones commissioned Manda ḏ-Hiia to reveal the rebels' conspiracy: "Rise above the uthras and see what they are planning and what they intend, they who say, "We will create a world". 'You have seen that they have forsaken the House of the Life and turned their faces to the place of Darkness.[505] Manda d̲-Hiaa was charged to bring order among the uthras and deliver them from failure. The Great One commanded him: 'zl 'l mardia d̲hšhka d̲'lan l̲biš mithašbia "March against the rebels of darkness who think out evil against us!"[506]

It is notable in tractate three of the Ginza, that the sequence of Manda d̲-Hiia's mission was interrupted; instead of descending towards the hapiqia maia (the streams of water) he went down towards the World of Darkness; and instead of restraining the defector uthras he defeated the evil powers of the World of Darkness. This confusion can be solved when the story is traced in the other chapters of the Ginza as well as in the other Mandaean writings such as draša d̲-iahia "the Book of John." In book 15 of the Ginza we read that the Great Ones commanded Manda d̲-Hiia to descend to the Second Life 'Yōšamin's abode to deter him and the rebellious uthras from their evil plans and to help him in accomplishing his work in a perfect order:

> For what reason the King of Light created you, and made you a king in Ayar (ether)? Why don't you go to the house of Yōšamin and arrange his works in perfect order? Yōšamin should know that the strength of the Life is greater than his futile strength.[507]

In another passage we find another reading:

> Then the Life called Yawar-Ziwa [508] on whose name nine hundred thousand uthras emerged. Then he created a form and gave it to him and said to him, 'Go, meet the Second (Life) with this form and lets us [508] Yawar-Ziwa is a being of light acquainted with Manda d̲-Hii and his son Hibil-Ziwa.

> find out what he will say and what he will propose. He went to his (Yōšamin's) presence and spoke to him, "O, Yōšamin, son of Dmut-Hiia, my father sent me hither". . . . By the (power) of the form which the Life gave to Yawar, all the škinas of Yōšamin trembled and quaked and his throne degraded and gave way unto downfall. His women who were standing at his presence were terrified. .[509]

Manda d̲-Hiia arrives at the house of Yōšamin and the planets fell on their faces:

> He was instructed by the wisdom of the Great One, and set forth and came towards Yōšamin. He stood on the vault of the house of Yōšamin, and he covered his gleam with his radiance.(?) He covered his gleam with his radiance, and an uproar ruptured in his house. An uproar ruptured in his house and the Planets fell on their faces.[510]

After all, it seems that everything went well and Manda d̲-Hiia was successful in his mission to Yōšmain and he could achieve his goal in a perfect way:

> I came to the world which the Second (Life) created, > from which all error and deficiency came into being > I uttered the voice of Life, > and planted the planting of the Great (One).
> I planted the planting of Life, > and I chose the elect ones; one by one I chose them, > and I explained to them and taught them concerning the goodness.

I made their eyes behold the place in which the Great (One) sit (or: enthroned).
I taught them, through the secret chants and recitations, the prayers and praise that we possess.
I made them part of the construction of the Life, and made them join the union of the Life.
I enlightened them with a sublime enlightenment that has no end, and I showed them the form which was (brought) from the concealed place.
When the elected ones saw it, their aching hearts were healed.
I uttered a proclamation, and I straightened up the trivial devils.[511]

§ 2.2.7.5.3 - Manda d-Hiia's encounter with the Powers of Darkness:

The World of Light realized that the World of Darkness was conspiring against it; it realized that Darkness expanded and became the fullness of the world (or: he became Pleroma of the cosmos).[512]

> From the day when the Evil (one) began to think, the evil was shaped > in him. He fell into a great wrath and ventured a war with the Light.[513]
> The Messenger was sent out to tread down the power of the Rebels.[514]

What caused Darkness to mount up its offence against the World of Light is the envious nature of darkness which is full of hatred and conflict.[515]

[515] Jonas stated that the "Darkness had first to reach its own outer limits, and to these it was pushed at some time in the course of the internal warfare in which the destructive passion of

Therefore, the higher deity summoned Manda d̲-Hiia and addressed him saying:

> "Arise, go to the House of the Seven (planets), the idle Rebels of Darkness![516] Idle are the gloomy Rebels of Darkness, and there is no light among them."[517]

Manda d̲-Hiia had some hesitation towards the mission, but after a prolonged persuasion by the Life it seems that he agreed to confront the powers of Darkness under some conditions. In response to his conditions, the higher deities of the World of Light promoted him and made him the "the King of the uthras", the "Lord of the Kušṭa' and the "Treasurer"". He was also given the authority upon all the world of Light and upon all the škinas and also upon the underworlds of Darkness.[518]

Manda d̲-Hiia was engaged in an astral war with the evil powers of the World of Darkness before the creation of the cosmos. Before he descended to the underworld, Manda d̲-Hiia did some reconnaissance of the dwelling of evil ones. He saw the furnaces of the consuming flame which was full of destroyers and dragons. He saw the rebellious monsters plotting wickedly against the good ones and forging weapons. He saw the "angels of that place" inflamed against each other. He saw Rūha Qadašta sitting there with her humurtas (female spirits) practicing false magic. He saw the arrogant King of Darkness challenging whoever claims that he was stronger than him.[519]

§ 2.2.7.5.4 - Mandada d-Hiia's Battle with the King of Darkness ('Ur)[520]:

When the Leviathan of the World of Darkness decided to swallow the world in order to cast down the Great Ones from their thrones, Manda d̲-Hiia appeared to him in the extensive lbuša garment of the Great Ones dnpiš umitar mn almea "which was more immense and surpassing from the worlds".[521] Manda d̲-Hiia showed him margina d̲mia hiia the staff of Living Water,[522] by which the rebels were crushed down. He showed him klil išata haita, "the crown of the living fire", which instilled terror into demons. The King of Darkness rose up and annihilated the whole world; he contained it with his strength and upalga d̲pumh̲ ubarqa qbar buried half of his mouth in the earth. He swallowed the black waters and gulped down all the demons and dewis and liliths and stood riqan "empty" (or: "naked") in the world. Manda d̲-Hiia approached the monster armed with strength of the Great One and some of his breath reached his garment, but the burning flame of the King of Darkness was extinguished and his navel fell upon the gate (lit: artery) of darkness and all darkness was formed from him. Manda d̲-Hiia seized his eyes and wrapped him with four shawls. He fettered the Evil's heart, dissolved his joints and crushed his liver. He folded his stomach with his bowels, wrapped his navel with a veil, tied a knot around his heart and cast poison in his entrails. He bound the King of Darkness with a fetter and put a muzzle on his mouth. The King of Darkness became tongue tied and retreated to his kanna place crying, "Alas, alas onto myself!"[523] Manda d̲-Hiia did not pay attention to the Evil's begging to forgive him and have mercy on him; instead he imprisoned him in his place and appointed rude giant guards to watch over him.[524]

[520] Lady Drower was told by the Mandaean priests, during her meetings with them in Iraq, that "Ur is the mighty Serpent or dragon of the underworld upon whom the material world rests. Above him are the seven material firmament and below him the seven underworlds of darkness. He has fiery breath like a flame, and his belly is alternately fire and ice. Souls too impure to undergo the lighter purification of maṭarata (purgatory) are drawn into his belly, and amongst these are unbelievers" (MII p. 253, n. 3).

[521] The garment has secret powers against the enemies and confers superior power on the wearer and therefore it is a weapon. The garment of Manda d̲-Hiia has such magic powers that he could, with his other weapons, subdue the powers of Darkness Zaehner 1955: 118.

[522] Cf. the cedar staff 'the darling of the great gods' in the old Mesopotamian legends. The staff is the 'symbol of Life' and the sign of kingship which contains magical powers. (Widengren 1950: 8, 9). The Assyrians called the staff 'kakku' a weapon which is considered as divine symbol at the same time (Chicago Assyrian Dict., p. 50).

When the King of Darkness tried to get rid of his fetters, Manda d̲-Hiia rose by the powers of the Life and created an iron wall around him. He tied seven knots around him and wrapped him with twelve veils. He bound him with the great voice and fettered him with a fetter so the seven zahriria flashes (or: flames) departed him. He flung his club and struck him and split his head. He made him shriek like a woman and made him weep like a child. He made dung into his food and urine into his drink and extinguished his devouring and destroying fire. He deprived him from his lust (or: greed) and clothed him with wrath. When Manda d̲-Hiia was triumphed he erected a throne for the good ones and set up a glamorous light beside it.[525]

§ 2.2.7.5.5 - Mandada d-Hiia Thwarts Rūha's Plans to Seduce Adam:

Rūha[526] and her retinue, the planets and the demons, began forging plans to capture Adam and keep him in their world: "We will entrap and catch Adam and detain him with us in the world!" [527] They planned to entrap him with horns and flutes and draw him into their congregation.[528] They proposed to arrange a feast and practice razia d̲rhamta the "secrets of love", Rūha and her party went up the Mount Carmel and set up their assembly and began practicing the secrets of love and said: "We will perform the secret of love with myrtle and entrap the whole world. We will perform the mystery of love with wine and entrap the world by our drunkenness. We will perform the mystery of love with drinking water." [529] They took the living water and poured turbid water into it. They took the head of the tribe and practiced on him the mystery of love and of lust, through which all the worlds are inflamed. They practiced on him seduction, by which all the worlds are seduced. They practiced on him the mystery of drunkenness, by which all the worlds are made drunken. The worlds are made drunk by it and turn their faces to the sea of Sup.[530]

Adam, the son of Adam, was inflicted with hasiruta "blunder" and his eyes found no sleep. He left his mother, Hawa (Eve) and turned his back to his brothers while they were asleep. He climbed the walls of the fortress and headed towards the Rūha's assembly. Rūha welcomed him warmly and she laughed, gladdened and became rejoiced and all the Planets started to serve him.[531] They offered him a drink, once, twice, and three times until he was intoxicated and his body desired dance. Then Rūha took him by the hand unapšẖ šaltẖ zaniuta "and he desired to fornicate with her".[532]

[530] GRR p. 132. The terms "drunkenness" and "intoxication" in Gnosticism refer to "ignorance" which is apposed by "sobriety" and "knowledge". Jonas believes that the term "intoxication" requires a special comment. He wrties, "The "drunkenness" of the world is a phenomenon peculiarly characteristic of the spiritual aspect of what the Gnostics understand by the term 'world'. It is induced by the "wine of ignorance" which the world everywhere proffers to man." He adds, "the ignorance of drunkenness is the soul's ignorance of itself, its origin and its situation in the alien world." To support this case, he cited the following from the Odes of Solomon XI. 6-8: "From the Lord's spring came speaking water in abundance to my lips. I drank and was drunken with the water of everlasting life, yet my drunkenness was not that of ignorance, but I turned away from vanity" (Jonas 1958: 71f.). ࡉࡀࡌࡀ ࡓࡁࡀ ࡖࡎࡅࡐ iama rba d̲-sup (often) the Great Ocean of destruction (MD, p. 323).

When he held her and kissed her and was about to sleep with her, Manda ḏ-Hiia appeared to him in a cloud of radiance. He made Adam hear an overwhelming voice and made his heart fall from its support. He undid the spells of Rūha and Adam felt ashamed.[533] Manda ḏ-Hiia shone in his pure garment and took away the secrets of Rūha and her party. He revealed their mysteries, discredited their speech and belied their oaths. He threw Rūha off her throne and held her back with a camel-bridle. He threw her down, struck her with his scourge and split her head open. He bound her and tied her up to the heart of heavens.[534] He grasped Šamiš[535] by the secret things (genitals) and made him like a woman. He made Yorba a sissy and struck Sin with his scourge. He seized kukba biša the evil planet and hurled him down.[536] He struck Bel (Jupiter) and removed the crown from his head. He smote Nirig (Mars) with his mace and amputated his limbs. He dealt with the planets who became arrogant towards the family of Life and exposed their follies to world.[537]

§ 2.2.7.6 - The Life Praises Manda d-Hiia for his Victory:

The Life thanked Manda d̲-Hiia for his distinguished triumph over the King of Darkness and the other forces of Darkness and bestowed on him more glory than ever before. The Life hailed the strength and courage of the heavenly warrior who could valiantly defeat the devouring fire:

> The Life thanked me, and gave me more radiance (or: glory) and spoke to me, "Kušṭa preserves you, good one, and preserve the word you have spoken." The Life spoke blissfully to the uthras and said: "Hail the strength of the man who could cure the water with fire. Hail the strength of the man against whom the fire sinned not." The Uthra shone with his radiance, and trod out a path for the perfect ones and rewarded them fully.[538]

"At the end of the ceremony", the Life embraced and kissed the Uthra, and handed him the 'Kušṭa' like the great ones. Once again the Life and the rest of the uthras praised Manda d̲-Hiia for his achievement by hailing him: abad ukašar qruia l'uthra d̲kul d̲tibad tikšar "He acted and seceded!" they hailed him, "Whatever you do you shall succeed!" [539]

[537] GRR pp. 140,141. Both narrations of Manda d̲-Hiia's triumph over the powers of darkness hold traces of similar myths such as the Ugaritic myth of Baal who crushed Lotan, the swift serpent. The King of Darkness ('Ur) who was defeated by Manda d̲-Hiia is similar to Leviathan, the monster, which was defeated by Yahweh at creation (Isaiah 27: 1) (Ringgren 1973: 149). Many resemblances are also found in the epic of Marduk's triumph over Tiamat (Jacobsen 1976: 175 ff.).

§ 2.2.7.8 - Manda d-Hiia, the Conjugal Advisor:

When Ptahil, with the help of Rūha and her retinue the Planets, finished creating Adam and Eve, Manda ḏ-Hiia approached Adam in a corporeal form lest not to frighten him. He sat beside Adam and sprinkled the splendor of the Great Mana over him. Mand ḏ-Hiia began to instruct him, with a sublime voice, and awakened his heart from his sleep.[540]

Manda ḏ-Hiia thwarted the evil goals of the demons who intended to draw Adam to their congregation and destroyed their evil plans against him. Manda ḏ-Hiia and the other uthras arranged a great wedding for Adam, in which they recited hymns and liturgies. They disgraced the words of Rūha and suppressed her seditious call. They eliminated the evil of the Planets and brought all the monsters to naught. Manda ḏ-Hiia and his company of the uthras set up the root of life, and the Life triumphed and brought victory to Adam's race. They remained with Adam until Hawa (Eve) was in labour. Manda ḏ-Hiia played the part of sabus ʻnšia (conjugal instructor?) who instructed Adam how to marry a woman. Manda ḏ-Hiia said: "Let the race of the Life be bountiful! The race of the Life will be bountiful, and from them the world will come to life. The world will come to life from them, and the Life will show them his gratitude, deliver them, and raise them from this world of the evil ones." [541]

Manda ḏ-Hiia established Adam on top of the building like the great ones, and made Hawa (Eve) in the shape of the cloud of light. Manda ḏ-Hiia appointed uthras to look after Adam and he was their leader. He began to teach Adam and his wife Hawa (Eve) wonderful hymns and the right rituals of masiqta "Ascension". He taught them prayers to the Life in order to strengthen their faith. He said to them: "You are raised and established in the place where the good ones are established. Amongst the Manas of Light you will be established." Manda d̲-Hiia sat and taught them like a teacher who taught his novice. He prayed for them and blessed them with the bless of the Great Ones. He prayed to Adam to rise and see the world of Light.

[540] in DY we read: "they created a messenger and sent him to the head of generation. He called out into the unrest of the world. Adam, who was lying down, awakened." (DY, p. 47) Rudolph believes that the "Gnostic view of the world demands revelation which comes outside the cosmos and displays the possibility of deliverance; for of himself man cannot escape from his prison in which according to this religion he is shut up. He is not only imprisoned but "asleep" or 'drunken'" (Rudolph, 1983: 119). For more details concerning the "call" and the "awakening", see Jonas 1958: pp. 80 ff.

§ 2.3 - The Third Account of Theogony:

§ 2.3 - The Third Account of Theogony:

In the third theogonic version the following variants are found in addition to the two preceding theogonic texts. In this text the Life instructs Manda d̠-Hiia concerning the creation. He informs him: (1) when the ࡐࡉࡓࡀ pira Fruit was inside the pira, ࡌࡀࡋࡊࡀ ࡖࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ malka d̠-nhūra (the King of Light) came into being. (2) From the King of Light, the Great Radiant Ayar (Ether) came into being and (3) from the Great Radiant Ayar, ࡏࡔࡀࡕࡀ ࡄࡀࡉࡕࡀ 'šata haita (the Living Fire) came into being (4) By the power of the King of Light, the Life, fruit and Jordan came into being and (5) from the living water (of the Jordan), the Life came into being (6) all the 'uthras came into being (Chart C).

In this version of creation we note that the main creator is ࡌࡀࡋࡊࡀ ࡖࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ malka d̠-nhūra the King of Light and not the Mana, and by his power the Life came into being. Also a new element is taking part in the process of creation. It is the ࡏࡔࡀࡕࡀ ࡄࡀࡉࡕࡀ 'šata haita the Living Fire from which ࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ nhūra (the light) emanated:

> Before all the worlds came into being there was this great fruit. When the great fruit was in the great fruit, the King of Light came into existence.[543] From the great and glorious King of Light the great ether of radiance came into being. From the great glorious King of Light Ayar Ziwa Rba ࡀࡉࡀࡓ ࡆࡉࡅࡀ ࡓࡁࡀ (the Great Radiant Ayar) came into being. From Ayar Ziwa Rba the living fire ࡏࡔࡀࡕࡀ ࡄࡀࡉࡕࡀ 'šata haita

[543] In the Gnostic (Mandaic) dualism there are two rival kings: malka d̠-nhura (the king of light) and malka d̠-hšuka (the king of darkness). Cf. Mazdaean cosmology: "In the beginning Ohrmazd (the Spirit of Good) was on high and dwelt in the Endless Light: he was characterized by omniscience and wisdom which some call Religion (dēn). Ahriman (the Spirit of Evil) was in the depths and dwelt in the endless Darkness: he was slow in knowledge and his will was to do harm. Between the kingdoms of light and darkness the Void which some call Vāy" (Zaehner 1955: 91, cited from Greater Bundahišn).

was brought into being.[544] From the living fire, the light ࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ nhūra came into being. By the power of the King of Light, Life came into being and the great fruit. The great fruit came being, and in it the Jordan came into being. The great Jordan came into being. The great Jordan came into being, there came into being the living water. The radiant and resplendent water came into being, and from the living water, I, the Life, came into being. I, the Life, came into being, and then all the uthras came into being.[545]

§ 2.3.1 - The King of Light:

The King of Light is not mentioned in the opening of the prayers in the different chapters of the Manadaean scriptures. It is the Life and Manda d̲-Hiia (the Gnosis of Life) who enjoy this privilege. The King of Light has no role in the Mandaean rituals and rarely mentioned in their scrolls and he is mentioned only once in tractate III (The Story of Creation) of the Ginza. But the King of Light remains a major player in the dualist system of Mandaic Gnosticism.[546] Whether the Mandaeans represented the "King of Light" as their "one god" to prove to the Moslems, after their invasion to Iraq in the sixth century, that they were monotheist in order to avoid either converting into Islam or put to death,[547] remains an issue which needs to be investigated, as "the development of Mandaeism still remains one of the central problems of the history of religion." [546] The Manicheans believed that the "King of the Paradise of Light", who is God Most High, brought the revelation to Mani when he was twelve years old. Ibn al-Nadim, Fihrist, Beirut (1994); English translation: Dodge, L., London (1970) p. 774:

فلما تم له اثنتا عشرة سنة اتاه الوحي، على قوله، من ملك جنان النور، وهو الله تعالى عما يقوله وكان الملك الذي جاءه بالوحي يسمى التوم، وهو بالنبطية، ومعناه: القرين، فقال له اعتزل هذه الملة، فلست من اهلها، وعليك بالنزاهة وترك الشهوات، ولم يأذن لك ان تظهر لحداثة سنك، فلما اتم له أربع وعشرون سنة اتاه التوم فقال: قد حان لك ان تخرج فتنادي بأمرك.

[547] All none Moslems had to prove to the Moslem invaders that they were people of the book. All "infidels" had to either convert to Islam or put to death. Some sects preferred to follow the Taqia; that is pretend to be people of the book in order to avoid certain death. The Taqia (مبدأ التقية) was originated from Islam itself and means "hypocritical" or "prevention". It is a

On the other hand, the Mandaean scriptures describe the King of Light as anterior to all the mysteries – the Jordan, radiance, light and air and beams of light, and the crown, and kušṭa (covenant), pihta (sacred bread) and the myrtle wreath – each mystery is more revered and sublime than any one of its companions.[549] He is situated in the lofty north,[550] strong, beautiful, and glorious, the origin of all luminous beings and father of all uthras.[551] He is the true deity, the lofty king whose powers are endless and infinite. No death comes near him and fadedness does not touch his nature:

> The great Lord of all kings: nothing was when he was not and nothing would be were he not to be; death is not imposed on him and evanescence means nothing to him. His light illuminates and his radiance irradiates all the worlds, and the kings who stand before him and shine in their radiance and in the great light which rests upon them. The Mandaeans believe that stars and planets contain supernatural powers (spirits) which affect the destinies of mankind and these powers are obedient to Malka d̲-Nhūra the King of Light.[553] The Mandaeans personify the light by the great light spirit Malka d̲-Nhūra surrounded by countless numbers of melki (kings; beings of light).[554]

> The King is delighted with the children of light. He calls one (of them), and a thousand answer him. By his word he planted uthras, and by the word of his moth he made the perfect raising. King of all the uthras and škinas, great crown at the top of the heights, gentle one, who subdue powerful, might, that restrain the rebellious.[555]

> The sparkles of his crown flash all around and rays of radiance, of light, and of glory issue from his face and between the leaves of his wreath. All the uthras and kings, all the worlds (beings) stand there in prayer and praise that sublime King of Light.[556]

No carpenter has built his throne and builder built his house. No one can visualize the nature of Malka d̲-Nhūra "the King of Light" and no one can comprehend the great Light. His sacred name is hidden from everyone, and no one can call him by his real name:

> No human carpenters constructed the throne beneath him; no master-builder in clay built the houses of his throne. He is King from the very beginning, whose kingdom lasts for ever and never passes away.[557]

§ 2.3.2 - ࡆࡉࡅࡀ ࡅࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ Ziwa uNhūra Radiance and Light:

Radiance is the active and the male power of light,[559] which accompanied the great Manas in their first emanation.[560] Radiance in 'the mystical teachings or inner gnosis of Mandaeans' represent the male factor, "whereas nhura light represent its female complement."[561] Radiance is considered the ancient Primal Father and referred to as pure "gold", where as the Light is the ancient Primal Mother and referred to as "silver":

> Now as to these two mysteries of ziwa and nhura (radiant light and diffuse light): know that they are the ancient primal Father and Mother. Pure gold is the mystery of the Father, its name is Radiance: silver is the Mother's mystery and its name is Light. Silver is the Mother's mystery [symbol] and its name is Light. The Crown is the Father's symbol and its name is Radiance: the myrtle-wreath the symbol of the Mother and its name is "Let there be Light". The "owner of a crown" [a priest] is concerned with the mystery of the Father. A Mandaean [layman] and his wife are occupied with the mystery of the Mother.[562]

There is more that one metaphor in the Mandaean dualism symbolizing sex and fecundity (male and female principles) such us: ziwa radiance and nhura light, aina wellspring and sindirka the palm tree, hiia Life and dmut-hiia counterpart or ṣauta companion, Jordan river (or: running water) and arqa earth. Some of the above ideas are found in a prayer known as "šal šulta" where the divine marriage is "typified in three allegorical pairs; Radiance and Light, Yawar-Ziwa and Simat-Hiia, and the Date-palm and wellspring":[563]

> Praised be the First Great Radiance and praised the First great Light. Praised be the mystic Tanna (womb?) which dwells in the great mystic First Wellspring and the First Date-palm. Praised be the great Yawar who was formed from the loins of Radiance. Praised is Simat-Hiia, Mother of all Kings, for from Her all world proceeded, because She was appointed as the result of secret mysteries.[564]

Light and Darkness is the main motif of the Mandaic Gnosticism and dualism. The whole existence consists of two worlds: the World of Light with its heavenly jordans and battalions of Beings of lights "uhtras", against the World of Darkness with its demons, liliths and evil beings. The hostility between these two worlds is eternal, but these worlds cannot be isolated because they derive their powers from each other:

> The worlds of darkness and the worlds of light are Body and Counterpart, (they are complements) of one another, neither can > remove from nor approach the other, nor can one distinguish either from its partner, moreover each derives strength from the other.[565]

The Mandaean literature informs us that Light came into existence by the power of the high divinities at the beginning of existence. It is the Light of the Great First Life which together with the Radiance encircle the Mana (the first intelligence):

> Let there be light, let there be light! Let there be light of the Great First Life![566] . Before the Mana there is light, behind the Mana glory, and at either side of the Mana radiance, brilliance and purity.[567]

During the baptism rituals, the priest proceeds towards the river, wades up in water, opens the gate of Light and compresses the evil elements of Darkness with his staff after the recitation of certain prayers. He commences these prayers with the name of the Life, the he praises the Radiance and the Light:

> In the name of the Life! Praised be the First Great Radiance and praised the Great First Light![568] "Strengthened and enhanced is he great mystery of radiance, light and glory which resteth on the mouth of the Great Life."[569]

Radiance and Light play an essential role in the religious life of the sect. For example; it is the duty of every Naşoraean (Mandaean) to carry out every single detail of the ritual in a perfect way, even when he wears his ritual rasta "outfit" and put on his turban, because his outfit symbolizes the Radiance and the Light:

During baptizing the Mandaean has to anoint with radiance and light, not in the name of a god or a spirit:

> Anoint with radiance, light and glory, the Oil wherewith I anointed and (which) I bestowed, not in the name of a god, not in the name of spirit, not in the name of messiah nor in the name of a temple-Ishtar. Nay, the oil with which I anointed, (the oil) which I bestowed is at my name, my Sign and (given) as the name and sign of a living, glorious, flourishing and steadfast race.[571]

§ 2.3.3 - ࡀࡔࡀࡕࡀ ࡄࡀࡉࡕࡀ 'Šata Haita The Living Fire:

The Mandaean literature do not provide us with sufficient knowledge concerning 'šata hiata "the living fire" or "the living flame" except it was created in the "house of Life",[572] and that Ptahil fetched some of the living fire and tossed it, with a piece of his garment, into the black waters, and thus the earth condensed and became solid.[573] The living fire is a constructive element of creation in contrast with the 'šata 'kilta "consuming fire" which is destructive.[574] The living fire along with the consuming fire spread among the stars.[575] The messengers and 'utras are usually dressed in the garments of living fire.[576] Manda ḏ-Hiia used klila ḏ'šata haita the crown of the living fire in his battle with the King of Darkness.[577] The "living fire" is mentioned in Manichaean literature in phrases such as the "ships of living fire and water"[578] or the "wheels of the living fire".[579]

§ 2.3.4 - ࡏࡅࡕࡓࡀ The 'Uthra:

First of all, we have to admit that the word 'uthra is not easy to explain. The Mandaic Dictionary defines the word as "wealth" according to Nöldke,[580] whereas Drower defines it as an "eternal being; a spirit of light and life."[581] The word is derived from a root meaning "to increase", "be abounding",[582] and unlike malkia who are sometimes good and sometimes evil, 'uthras are invariably pure and beneficent.[583] These beings of light are comparable with the yazatas in Zoroastrianism. The yazatas (like the 'uthras) cannot be rendered as "gods" or "angels" but they are associated with the divine and perform mundane tasks. In contrast to the abhored daevas, the yazatas were capable of being worshipped. They are also the guardians of the celestial bodies and the messengers of Ahura Mazda. The chief Yazata is Mithra and some of the others include Daena, Mah, Rashnu, Tistrya, and Zam. Just like the case with the word "uthra', Boyce admits the difficulty in defining the word yazatas and prefers to leave it untraslated.[584]

In the Manichean Psalms of Thomas the sons of light are also called "the Riches" (Widengren, 1961: 93-4). Drower associates 'uthra with the Syriac ܥܬܪ "to be rich", "abounding" and finds no reason why 'uthra not to be translated as "wealth" and she does not agree with Lidzbarski's suggestion that the Mandaeans chose the word 'uthra to avoid confusion with Jewish and Moslem names for angels. She reaches the conclusion that the 'uthri might originally have been life-spirits bringing fertility and wealth in the shape of spring and rain. She bases her conclusion on W. Robertson Smith, who mentioned in his book Religion of the Semites, that there was a god in South Arabia named Athtar who presided over irrigation, and claimed that 'athari referred to being watered by the sky and fountains. (MII pp. 94-5, n.2).

[583] ATŠ, p. 15.

Even the Mandaean liturgies cannot give us a satisfactory explanation concerning the 'uthras, except that they resemble radiance and rays of light and they do not lie. It is the Planets who lie and they will come to end on the great day of Sup:

> Who will come, who will tell me what uthras are like, what uthras resemble, and what do rays-of-light resemble? Uthras resemble Radiance, "Rays" resemble Light. Uthras pledge their word (lit. take oath) and do not lie, The planets lie: they Come to an end on the Great Last Day.[585]

According to Mandaeanism, Uthras were created when the ether-world came into being, and the ether-world was peopled by angelic beings, "uthras":

> In it (in the ether-world) ziwa Radiance will form itself and sublime Light nhūra be set up therein. In there will be uthras and Rays-of-Light will be established therein appearances that shine with lovely radiance.[586]

These beings are made of light, which emanated from radiance and from the living water, which gushed out from the Light. They are not First Emanations, but they were created by them:

> In the land of Light, the Life existed; the Life existed in the land of Light. And from the Life, water poured forth, water poured forth form the Life. And from the water Radiance emanated, and from Radiance, Light emanated, and from Light the uthras came into being, who are standing and praising the Life.[587]

The uthras are not like human beings. They do not need to communicate by means of vocal sounds; they communicate telepathically. They can read the thoughts of each other and converse to each other by means of baptism and masiqtas (rituals of ascension of the soul) and prayers. They are so swift and light and glow more than the stars (lamps):

> And that which conveys the intercourse of uthras is the sublime ether. And they are alike in the meditations of their hearts, talking with a person with their thoughts and not speaking (with their mouths). Uthras converse with one another by means of their baptism and masiqtas and their devotional prayers: the resemble stars which quickly come out and go in, the one with its fellow (- star), for they are swifter than the wind and as brilliant as lamps.[588]

The uthras are ancient and older than earth and the Planets :

Book III of the Ginza Rba tells us that countless battalions of uthras came into being when the Life called forth "the Second Life". One of these uthras was Abatur, the eldest son of the Second Life who advised his father to defy the Life and create a new world.[592] They live with the sublime world of the King of Light in his abode that is translucent and bright, with great crowns on their heads. [593]

The Mandaeans avoid using the word (malka) for the heavenly beings. Malkia, "kings", apart from its literal and derived meaning when applied to priests, is a term which may indicate evil beings as well as good: there is a malka d̠-nhura (king of light) and malka d̠-hšuka (king of darkness):

> Alaha (god) descended from his loftiness and assumed the shape of malakia angels. The malakia angels put on the (masquerade) of demons and day by day they pervert the minds of men. They clench to the necks of priests, slaughterers and oracle-tellers and eat form their flesh until they are full. And drink from their blood until they are satisfied. They speak with (false) wisdom and deception and change the times.[594]

In the story of creation it is written that the higher deity, the Great Mana, bestowed the title "the king of the uthras" on Manda d̠-Hiia before sending him down to put an end to the mutiny of the Second Life's uthras:

> You are the king of uthras, the Lord of the kušṭa (covenant) and the Creator of the treasures, we give authority upon all the worlds of Light

The World of Light is located to the north where Abatur is enthroned. Mandaeans turn towards the Polar Star (Polaris), the region of the vault of heaven, during their prayers. The North is the source of light, instruction and healing. If a Mandaean wishes to pray and reflect, he faces the north and their dead are buried towards the north. Their bit-manda (temple) always faces the north. The House of Abatur (Abatur of the Scales) is situated north controlling the path which leads to the Realm of Light. From her long stay in Iraq and the extensive study and her lengthy observation of the Mandaeans rituals, Lady Drower believes that the climate of Mesopotamia was a main factor which made the Mandaeans chose the north as their Qiblah (direction for prayers) and the direction according to which they bury their dead.[601]

The world of Light is a metaphysical world beyond the reach of the evil Planets. Physics does not apply and no gravity is needed; it is independent in its own laws:

According to the Mandaeans, the earth of Darkness is located to the south of the earth of Light,[604] beneath the earth of Darkness:

> Beyond the earth of light downwards and beyond the earth Tibil, in the South there is that earth of darkness.[605]

The composition of the World of Darkness is different from the World of Light and do not resemble in any way that of the World of Light:

Darkness exists through its own evil nature and the worlds of Darkness are numerous and without limit:

> Darkness exists through its own evil nature. It is a horrid darkness, a desolate gloominess which knows not the First and the Last.[607]

The Mandaeans believe that the underworld is made of six layers; this lowest (first) is copper, then iron, brass, steel, gold, silver and dust. ʿUr, the King of Darkness is confined in arqa d̲nhaša "the earth of copper" by Hibil-Ziwa.[608]

The inhabitants of the World of Darkness show no fidelity to their habitation. Their earth is black waters and their heights are deep darkness:

> The worlds of darkness are numerous and without end.[609] Broad and deep is the abode of evil, whose peoples showed no commitment to the place which is their endless habitation, whose kingdom came into being from themselves.[610] They came into being from the tanna (womb) and procreation of the Darkness and from the whole saka (extreme, limit) of the Black Waters.[611] Their earth is black water and their heights gloomy darkness.[612]

Manichaeism, which adopted the Persian dualism, also believes that the universe consists of two worlds: World of Light and the World of Darkness and Satan came into being from the World of Darkness, as we read in the Fihrist, Mani said: "From the land of Darkness there was Satan (al-Šayṭān), who is not eternal in his own person, but the elements of his ingredients are eternal. But Darkness and Light are bound together, and without darkness there was no light:

> For darkness and light are bound together: had there been no dark
> then light would not have come into being. [613]

The Mandaeans envisaged that the "cosmos beyond" consists of two realms: Light and Darkness and each with its own rulers and subjects.[614] Those of Light are described as bhiria zidqa "the chosen righteous" who are ࡌࡀࡍࡃࡏ mand' "knowledgeable" of the Life and full with ṭabuta "goodness", while the sons of Darkness characterized as "foolish" or "evil":[615]

> The world of darkness, utterly full of evil, ... full of devouring fire ... full of falsehood and deceit. A world of turbulence without steadfastness, a world of darkness without light ... a world of death without eternal life, a world in which the good things perish and plans come to naught.[616]

Manda ḏ-Hiia provides us with a pictorial description of that world and its inhabitants, when he descended to the world of darkness:

> I went to the place of darkness; to the place where the evil ones dwell, and to the dwelling which is full of destroyer. (I went to) the place of the dragons, and to the furnaces of the consuming flames. To the furnaces of fire, whose flames ascend (and) reach the middle of firmament. I descended and found the rebellious monsters of the darkness. I descended and found them, as all of them plot in evilness.

> They stand and plot in evilness and stand and forge weapons.[617] I beheld the black water in it, which rose up boiling, seething and bubbling. And whoever enters there dies, and whoever beholds it is scorched. I beheld the dragons, which were hurled there and writhe about. I beheld the dragons of every kind and every colour. I beheld the chariots of darkness, which do not resemble one another. I beheld the wicked rebels, as they are seated in their chariots. I beheld the wicked rebels, how they are arrayed with weapons of evil. They are arrayed with weapons of evil, and plot evil against the Place of Light. They were all arrayed with weapons and seated before him, the King of Darkness.[618]

§ 2.3.7- ࡌࡀࡋࡊࡀ ࡖࡄࡔࡅࡊࡀ (ࡀࡅࡓ) malka d-hšuka The King of Darkness (ʻUr):

The Mandaean myth portrays the King of Darkness (ʻUr) in different forms and shapes. Sometimes he is a gigantic reptile where his dragon nature appears and sometimes he is represented as a snake biting its tail (as he is drawn on the Mandaean talisman the skandola).[619] In her book The Mandaeans of Iraq and Iran Lady Drower gave a Mandaean drawing representing ʻUr in the form of a louse whose body contains the worlds which extend towards the tail, seven in number: the first is the maṭarta of Šamiš, the second is the world of mšuni kušṭa (the Mandaean ideal world), the third is the world of the Mandaeans and the rest are maṭarthas (watch-houses). Above ʻUr are the seven heavens and under his belly, which is of fire, there is the black water (oil) which produces fire. Beneath the black water are seven layers of copper-like earth.[620]

[619] In the Mandaean talismanic seal ("Skandola") ʻUr is portrayed as a serpent encircling the other elements of evil; the hornet, the scorpion and the lion (MII p. 38). On the other hand, Mead asserts that ʻUr is originally the Chaldean Deus Lunus (snake); he is the oldest son of Rūha, the world-mother, and corresponds in some respects with the Yaldabaōth of "Ophite" origin (See Mead, 1924: 35 n. 2). Cf. Syriac incantation bowl 117ES where an image of a snake is surrounding the text and eating its own tail (Segal, 2000: 147 plate 134). See also C. H. Gordon, 'Leviathan: Symbol of Evil', apud Biblical Motifs, Origins and Transformations, ed. A. Altmann, Cambridge, (1966), 1-9.

The Ginza informs us that the King of Darkness was formed from the black waters and emerged through his own evil nature:

> From the black water the King of Darkness was formed, and emerged through his own evil nature. He waxed strong, mighty, and powerful, he called forth and propagated a thousand thousand evil generations without limit and myriad ugly creations beyond count.[621] That King of Darkness assumed all the forms of the creatures of the world: the head of the lion, the body of the dragon, the wings of the eagle, the back of the tortoise, the hands and feet of a monster. [622] He walks, he crawls, creeps, flies, screams, is rude, threatening, roars, groans, gives (insolent) winks, whistles, and knows all the languages of the world.[623] When he wants he stretches his body, and when he wants he makes himself small. He moves his handamh̲ "membrum" in and out, and owns (the genitals) of men and women. And when he shakes (perceives?) all the mysteries,[624] he rages with his voice, his word, his smoke, his breath, his eyes, his mouth, his hand, his leg, his strength, [622] The above description of the snake/dragon 'Ur resembles Akkadian horned serpent bašmu - the mythical monster created in the sea, 60 leagues long with multiple mouths and tongues. (Dalley, 1989: 323) Mani described al-Šayṭan "Satan" as follows: "His head is the head of a lion and is body like the body of a dragon (great serpent). His wing is like the wing of a bird, his tail like the tail of a great fish, and is four feet like the feet of the beast burden" (The Fihrist of al-Nadim, Dodge 1970: 778). The story of 'Ur's defeat on the hands of Manda ḏ-Hiia is identical to Leviathan of the Bible, the monster which was defeated by Yahweh at creation, and also to the defeat of Lutan, the swift serpent, by Baal (see Ringgren, 1973: 148-9).

He lifts up his eyes and the mountains quake, the whisper of his lips makes the plains quake.[626]

The following verse from the Book of John (draša d̠-iahiah) shows that this world is defined by darkness, and darkness by the world. It also indicates the contrast between the two different natures of the King of Light and the King of Darkness. This dualism reflects the Gnostic beliefs in general:[627]

> Two kings came into being (or: were there), two natures were fashioned: a king of this world and a king beyond the world. The king of these ages (or: aeons) put on a sword and crown of darkness. The crown of darkness he put on and took a sword in his right hand. A sword he took in his right hand and he stands there and slaughters his sons, and his sons slaughter each other. The king beyond the worlds put on a crown of light. A crown of light he put on and took Kušṭa (the Truth) in his right hand. Kušṭa he took in his right hand, he stands there and instructs his sons. He stands there and instructs his sons, and his sons instruct one another.[628]

[628] draša d̠-iahia (The Book of John) pp. 46: 11 – 47: 4. The text:

Book V of the Ginza tells that 'Ur was the offspring of Rūha and her brother Gaf (one of the lords of the world of Darkness).[629] Other Gnostic stories report that "Pistis Sophia desired to produce alone, without her consort, a work that would be like unto the first-existing Light: it came forth as a celestial image which constituted a curtain between the higher realms of light and the later-born, inferior aeons; and shadow extends beneath the curtain, that is, on its outer side which faces away form the light. The shadow, which was called "Darkness," became matter; and out of this matter comes forth, as an abortion, the lion-shaped Ialdabaoth."[630]

Amazingly the Mandaean still preserve, in some of their literature, the biblical name ࡋࡉࡅࡉࡀࡕࡀࡍ "Leviathan" identified with 'Ur. In ATŠ (The Thousand and Twelve Questions) he is portrayed as the serpent that swallows the sinners and the negligent priests. Also those who are attacked by a snake are "marked with the sign of Leviathan and become the portion of Darkness."[631] On the other hand the characterization of the Mandaean King of Darkness matches the depiction of the demiurge Ialdabaoth who has the aspect of a lion and a serpent cited in the Apocryphon of John. § 2.3.9 - ࡓࡅࡄࡀ Rūha; the Queen of Darkness:

Rūha (resp. Namrūs or Hiwat)[637] is the Arch-demoness, the queen of Darkness.[638] She is the daughter of "Qin" the Mistress of Darkness. She is the ruler of the third maṭarta (watch-house)[639], and dwells in first underworld.[640] Rūha is the mother of the King of Darkness 'Ur,[641] and the mother of the Seven planets, the Twelve Signs of the Zodiac and the Five planets. She is considered as a kind of "'fallen wisdom figure" resembling Sophia in other Gnostic traditions:[642] she fights and suffers and appears in several realms at the same time.'[643] Rūha is the leader of the underworld forces and the "entity incorporation powers of darkness which the light-world had to conquer."[644] The Mandaeans use the term ࡍࡉࡔࡉࡌࡕࡀ nišimta for "soul" and ࡓࡅࡄࡀ rūha for "spirit". The expression rūha "spirit" stands on the lower level and according to Rudolph corresponds to the "soul" (psychē) in the Hellenistic sources.[645] Rūha is the immaterial part of man which influenced by physical desires.[646] Rūha's symbolical colour, according to the Mandaeans, is sky-blue, [647] and can appear as a woman of extreme beauty either in her blue mantle or naked, apparently, to seduce men.[648]

[642] Buckley, HR 1982: 60. The western female figure of Sophia "Wisdom" is unknown in Mandaeanism, nevertheless, the Ginza connects Rūha with false wisdom: [illegible]

In Book VI of the Ginza Rba (the book of "Dinanukt") Rūha describes her self as "light and darkness", "error and truth", "destruction and structure" etc., in clear dualist terms:

> I am the life which exists since eternity. I am the kušṭa which was from afore-the beginning. I am the radiance, I am the light, I am the death, I am the life, I am the darkness, I am the light, I am the error, I am the truth, I am the destruction and I am the structure, I am the offence (accidental disqualification for ritual etc.) and its purification. I am the outstanding being who is prior to that (one) who built the heavens and earth.[649]

[643] Buckley, HR 1980: 260. Jonas has no answer to "how this figure 'Wisdom', or at least its name, came to be combined in Gnostic thought with the moon-, mother-, and love-goddess of Near Eastern religion, to form that ambiguous figure encompassing the whole scale from the highest to the lowest, from the most spiritual to the utterly sensual (as expressed in the very combination "Sophia-Prunikos", "Wisdom the Whore" " (Jonas 1958: 176-177).

When Rūha (the goddess of the Underworld and mother of all evil) [650] realized that Ptahil was having difficulties in his first attempt to create the world, she committed incest three times with 'Ur (the King of Darkness)[651] in order to produce the luminaries. In the first time she approached Ur, as his mother, and said to him, "Arise and sleep with your mother and you will be freed from your fetter!" He slept with her and after seven days she bore the Seven (planets),[652] but her offspring did not make her happy: "when she beheld them, her heart fell from its support". In the second time she approached him as his sister, and said to him, "I am your sister; if you sleep with me your strength will be twice as much." He slept with her and after twelve days she bore the Twelve (signs of the Zodiac) and again they did not please her. In the third time, she approached him as his daughter and said to him, "Rise, my father, and behold your daughter! Embrace me and kiss me and sleep with me and [650] Jonas writes, 'Rūha, literally "spirit." The perversion of this term to denote the highest personification of evil is an interesting episode in the history of religion, all the more paradoxical in view of the fact that the full title of this anti-divine figure is Rūha d-Qudša, i.e., "the Holy Spirit." (Jonas 1958: 72 n. 25). DA gives Rūha seven names: "she enflames the womb", "treasure", "She-lusted-after", "She-conserved", "Drop", "Qin"(the queen, mistress of darkness. Often identified with Rūha) , "She-loved-these". DA p. 38.

[651] The Mandaean Leviathan, the father of the Seven (planets), the Twelve (signs of the Zodiac) and the Five (the planets less the Sun and the Moon). Some scholars connect him with Tiamat, the chaos monster who was killed by Marduk. (Jonas 1958: 117). He is the offspring of Rūha and Gaf (one of the Giants of the World of Darkness) (see book 5 of the Ginza Rba). He is the dragon which encircles the whole world and that no one can match his power (GRL p. 11: 11). Budge writes, "In some portion of the Black Water dwells a great she-devil called Rūha, and her husband 'Ur, who is the god of Darkness, and is the great antagonist of the god of Light. Here we have we have a cosmogony derived from the ancient Sumerians, and Tiamat, Kingu and Marduk under other names, and we may regard the Mandaeans as the representatives of the ancient worshippers of Ea, the great Water-god of Eridu" (Budge 1930: 240).

[652] The seven "planets" were gods in the Babylonian pantheon, including the sun and the moon. (Wilson, 1958: 10). Gnosticism, in general, considered the seven planets as the seven spheres which separated the soul from its heavenly home (Ibid 105).

gaze your fill at the world." Again he slept with her and she conceived five "monsters" (the planets without the Sun and the Moon), and again they were not what Rūha wished for.[653] Rūha could not achieve her goals; instead she lost her magical powers and failed to free her son Ur from his fetters.[654]

§ 2.3.9.2 - ࡓࡅࡄࡀ ࡌࡀࡎࡈࡀࡍࡉࡕࡀ rūha mastanita "Rūha, the Seductress":

Rūha d̠-Qudša "Holy-Spirit"[655] is an epithet for Rūha, a personification of the emotional, lower and feminine elements in human personality.[656] She is the "desirous" or "to make love sick" a symbol of ࡁࡀࡆࡍࡀࡒࡉࡕࡀ baznaqita "lust".[657] Rūha's epithet "qudša" corresponds to a category of cultic staff of Ištar which includes female prostitutes called qadištu.[658] We read in the Ginza that the other epithet of Rūha is, ࡃࡋࡉࡁࡀࡕ ࡏࡎࡕࡓࡀ ࡀࡌࡀࡌࡉࡕ d̲libat 'stra amamit "Libat-Ištar-Amamit."[659]

[653] GRR p. 112: 14 ff. These three acts of incest show clearly that the planets are the product of evil. Zaehner stated that consanguineous marriage is of Magian origin and that the Rūha and Ur act of incest is similar to Ohrmazd's consanguineous marriages (intercourse) with his mother, his sister and his daughter. Zaehner mentions, according to the Acts of Pusai, that the Sun, Moon, and stars were the children of Ohramazd. These three consanguineous marriages were considered the most holy of all among the Zoroastrians (Zaehner 1955: 154, 5). Jonas suggests that "the spheres are the seats of the Archons, especially of the "Seven" that is, of the planetary gods borrowed from the Babylonian pantheon" (Jonas 1958: 43). (In spite of "archon" is of western source, we find ࡀࡓࡊࡅࡍ arkun "archon" in some Mandaean texts such as the Ginza p. 334: 14, "archon" also occurs in Manichaeism (see Widengren 1961, English translation 1965: 55).

[654] Zaehner could establish some resemblances between Rūha and her son Ur on the one hand, and between Āz and Ahriman on the other. Āz, who belongs to Zervanite demonology in old Persia, is the "personification of concupiscence – acquisitiveness, gluttony, and lust, and perhaps much more besides.' In this respect (based on Alexander of Lycopolis) he writes: "Āz is the mother of all the demons and the greatest of them. In the diabolical hierarchy she is always mentioned first, taking precedence over Ahriman. Her relationship with the latter is exactly parallel to the relationship of the female Rūhā to the male Ur in the Mandaean scriptures. Ur is the king of darkness; Rūhā is his mother and stands for totality of evil." (For mote details concerning the Persian Demon Āz, and her resemblances with the Mandaean Rūha, see Zaehner 1955: 166).

[655] Rūha has other epithets: ࡓࡅࡄࡀ ࡖࡒࡅࡃࡔࡀ ࡖࡋࡉࡁࡀࡕ ࡏࡎࡕࡓࡀ ࡀࡌࡀࡌࡉࡕ ࡔࡅࡌࡀ rūha d̠qudša d̠libat ʿstra amamit šuma "she is Rūha d̠-Qudša whose name is "Libat-Ištar-Amamit" (GRR p. 62: 19) Rūha d̠-Qudša is not mentioned in esoteric writings (SA p. 47).

[656] CP, p. 291 n. 2. Jonas believes that the perversion of the term rūha "spirit" to "donate the highest personification of evil is an interesting episode in the history of religion" (Jonas 1958: 72, n. 26).

She conspired with the Planets to entrap Adam and install him in their congregation; in the earth of Tibil. Rūha and her entourage practiced the mysteries of love in order to seduce the whole world. They took the living water and poured turbid water in it. They took the head of the tribe and practiced on him the mystery of love and lust, through which the whole world are inflamed. They practiced on him the mystery of drunkenness, by which all the worlds are made drunken. The world became drunk and turned their faces towards the great ocean of Sup.[660]

Woe to those who have been tempted by Rūha for they shall be swallowed by the demon Karapiun "the Swallower":

Rūha assisted Ptahil (the Mandaean demiurge) in creating the physical world, infusing some of her secrets in this creation.[662] Ptahil created Adam after his image and Hawa (Eve) after the image of Rūha:

> Ptahil spoke to Rūha and her angels, "I will create a male after my image and female after your image. We shall call the male Adam and the female Hawa (Eve)."[663]

Rūha is an illusionist who can manipulate and mix times.[664] She appeared to ࡀࡃࡀࡌ ࡁࡓ ࡀࡃࡀࡌ adam br adam Adam, the son of Adam, in the image of his wife (and sister) Hawa (Eve) and seduced him to fornicate with her.[665] But the messenger Manda d̠-Hiia could thwart her plans at the last moment and saved Adam, the son of Adam from her seduction.[666] She is connected with pollution and uncleanness; women in general are considered a source of pollution because of their nature.[667] The Mandaean legend tells us that Rūha disguised herself as "Anhuraita", Noah's wife, and Noah took her and she became pregnant and brought forth three sons: Ham, Yam and Yafet.[668]

§ 2.3.9.3 - The End of Rūha and her Believers:

At the end of the worlds Rūha, the Planets together with the wicked and the unbelievers will be swallowed by the great Leviathan 'Ur.[669]

> Rūha and mšiha (Jesus) and the Planets and all those souls who confess them, will call each other and reach each other, and lead each other by the hand. They are to be bound and fettered and then, like a pomegranate of lead, will depart and fall into 'Ur, the lord of Darkness, into his huge interior. (Then) smoke will wind up and fire will be fanned and consume 'Ur, the lord of Darkness and 'uat Rūha, the liar and the Planets and all those souls who believe in them.[670]

[672] ࡍࡅࡊࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ nukraiia "alien" or "strange", theologically "inconceivable", "remote", "indefinable", is a constant characteristic of the "Life", the main deity in the Mandaean belief. The formula, "In the name of the great first alien Life from the countless world of light which is above all deeds" speaks of the "first'" Life 'that is above all deeds (or: creations)", i.e., above the world and "free from any kind of relation to the world" (Rudolf, 1983: 62). The Mandaean belief consider the Life Life ࡄࡉࡉࡀ ࡁࡀࡓࡀࡉࡉࡀ hiia baraiia is an "outer entity" and its home is "outside" in the world "beyond". (CP p. 78). Jonas finds "The concept of the alien Life is one of the impressive word-symbols which we encounter in Gnostic speech, and it is new in the history of human speech in general" (Jonas, 1958: 49).

[673] ࡀࡋࡌࡉࡀ worlds: According to the Gnostic view, the earth is set in the centre of the cosmos and surrounded by the air and the eight heavenly spheres which consist of the seven planets. "Beyond them lies the realm of the unknown god, the Pleroma (the "fullness"), with its own graduated worlds (aeons)" (Rudolph, 1983: 67). Jonas believes that the "worlds" of the Mandaeans correspond the "aeons" of Hellenistic Gnosticism (Jonas, 1958: 52).

[674] Concerning the raza "mystery" Wasserstrom writes: "The "great mystery" of Mazdak, the "raza rabba" of the Mandaeans, and the "raza rabba" of Jewish mysticism appear to have been technical terms in a common late-antique Mesopotamian cosmic semiotics" (Wasserstrom, 1995: 42 n. 115).

[675] ࡐࡉࡓࡀ pira (פירא) fruit, used often as gnostic term (καρπος) as an expression of emanation. (MD p. 371), (see above §2.1.1).

[676] ࡀࡉࡀࡓ aiar (αηρ) the upper atmosphere, air, ether, wind. The genie of the Upper Air. (MD p. 14) (see above § 2.2.2)

[677] ࡌࡀࡍࡀ mana (מאנא) vessel, garment, utensil, instrument, implement (ibid p. 246). The word mana when meaning "mind', "thought", "intelligence" is of non-Semitic derivation: the Aramaic mana is "garment", "robe", "vehicle", "vessel", "instrument". Lady Drower stated: "There is often word-play on the two meanings, and this passed into other Gnostic literature so that "robe" or "vessel" or "vehicle" is used as a cryptogram for mana meaning "mind" or "soul". In general, Mana in a cosmic sense is equivalent to the Stoic, Valantinian, and Sethian Νους, 'the emanation of the Forefather" (SA, p. 2 n. 1), (see above § 2.1.2).

[678] The word kabbīr "strong, mighty" appears in the Bible: Isa 10: 13, 16: 14, Job 8:2, 15: 10 etc. (for more details concerning kabbīr see Rendsburg G. A., "kabbīr in Biblical Hebrew", JAOS, vol. 112, (1992), pp. 649-651).

[679] ࡆࡉࡅࡀ ziua, ziu (זיוא) (a) brightness, brilliance, light, radiance (b) often used as an attribute or name of uthras, being of light, glorious being (MD p. 166), (see above § 2.3. 2).

[680] ࡍࡄࡅࡓࡀ nhura, anhura (נהורא) light. The implication that ziwa (radiance is an approximate translation), the conjuction of nhura, is an active creative male principle and light a receptive, passive (female) principle occurs more than once in ATŠ. (SA p. 6), (see above § 2.3. 2).

[684] ࡉࡀࡓࡃࡍࡀ iardina (Aram. st. emph. for הירדן) Jordan, running water, river, flowing stream. The name of the Biblical Jordan was employed in the earliest Gnostic systems, and notably in that of the Peratae (who were in the Euphrates region) (Schaf-Herzog VII-§11, 12 [p. 150-1]. See also Albright, AJSLL, 1920: 292-3) Drower believes that yardina has no reference to the river Jordan in Palestine. By Mandaeans, both Jordan and Nile are called the Ardana or Ardan (MII p. xxiv note 4.), (See above § 2.1.4).

[685] ࡔࡀࡓࡔࡀ šarša or širša: root, tribe, family. Sometimes with religious meaning širša taqna "the Mandaean faith" (MD pp. 463-4) BL 23601 ࡔࡉࡓࡔࡉࡀ.

[793] The idea of rebels who are subdued by "Manda d-Hiia" is common in Mandaean writings. The following passage describes the conflict between Light and Darkness, the main Gnostic principle in the Mandaean belief. It also refers to Yōšamin's "the Second Life" revolt against his father, "the Life" :
"From the day when the Evil one began to think , the evil was molded in him. He was angry in a great anger and made war with the Light. The Messenger was sent out to tread down the power of the Rebels." (Draša dYahya 'The Book of John" p. 48 = Lidzbarski's manuscript, Das Johannesbuch p. 51) The text:

In the Mandaean literature Rūha as a fallen wisdom figure resembles Sophia (Wisdom) in other Gnostic traditions. However, Qadishtu is an Akkadian name meaning Sacred women. In Babylon they were known as Ištaritu – women of Ištar. In (GRR f. 31v: 19) she is Rūha d̲-Qudša whose name is Libat-Ištar-Amamit ࡓࡅࡄࡀ ࡖࡒࡅࡃࡔࡀ ࡖࡔࡅࡌࡄ ࡋࡉࡁࡀࡕ ࡏࡔࡕࡀࡓ ࡀࡌࡀࡌࡉࡕ . Rūha is the daughter of Qin, she was married to her brother Gaf. She was taken to the upper world by Hibil-Ziwa, and brought the monster-child 'Ur to birth. She became 'Ur's paramour, and had by him two sets of children, the seven planets and the twelve Houses of the Zodiac. (see above §2.3.9).

[825] Hiwat or Hivat Lidzbarski from hiuia, pointing to חות as a name of the goddess of the underworld in Carthaginian inscription (MD p. 142). Cf. רבת חות אלת מלכת שיסכרא "the lady Hebat (i.e. the Hurrian goddess H̱epat), the goddess queen of Išẖara. Also Hewwat the goddess (See G. Levi Della Vida, "A Hurrian Goddess at Carthage?", JAOS, vol. 68, No. 3, 1948, pp. 148-149). A Hurrian rock relief (mid-thirteenth cent. B.C.) shows the great queen Puduhepa pouring libation to Hepat (Alexander, JNES, vol. 36, No. 3, (1977) pp. 199-207, esp. 199). Mountain gods and goddesses were commonly worshiped in Anatolia and Syria. At Yazili Kaya, the goddess Hipat stands on an animal, standing itself on blocks suggesting mountains, while her consort Teshub stands on the necks of two mountain-gods (Barnett, "A Winged Goddess of Wine on an Electrum Plaque", Anatolian Studies, vol. 3, (1980), pp. 169-178, esp. p. 177). H̱epat is a Hurrian goddess, the consort of the weather god Teshub. She was called Queen of Heaven and was assimilated by the Hittites to their national goddess, the sun goddess of Arinna. Teshub and Hebat had cult centres at Kummanni (classical Comana Cappadociae) and at Aleppo (Halab) and other cities in the region of the Taurus Mountains. [851] ࡏࡅࡓ 'Ur, the Leviathan, in the Mandaean system is the father of the Seven (planets), the Twelve (signs of the Zodiac) and the Five (monsters). The mythological archetype of this figure is he Babylonian Tia'mat, the chaos-monster slain by Marduk in the history of creation. Jonas believes that the closest Gnostic parallel to our tale is to be found in the Jewish apocryphal Acts of Kyriakos and Julitta, "where the prayer of Kyriakos relates how the hero, sent out by his Mother into foreign land, the "city of darkness," after long wandering and passing through the waters of the abyss meets the dragon, the "king of the worms of the earth, whose tail lies in his mouth. This is the serpent that led astray through passions the angels from on high; this is the serpent that led astray the first Adam and expelled him from Paradise . . . " (Jonas, 1958: 117), (See above § 2.3.7).

[855] The knots (usually odd in numbers) are used in exorcism, to break the spells, or for healing, and the magician had recourse to several options are used as a powerful means to subdue evil. In text 22:213 ff. Hibil says, "I sent against him (the demon) the knot which was above all knots .." (Yamauchi, 1967: 249). In Surah no. 113 of the Qur'an "Muhammad seeks refuge from the "evil of blowers (feminine) upon knots النفاثات في العقد." (Ibid 60) The story tellers say that "a Jew called Lubaid and his daughters bewitched Muhammad by tying eleven knots in a cord which they hid in a well. The result was that the Prophet fell seriously ill and would undoubtedly have died had not God intervened" (Budge, 1930: 62).

[951] ࡔࡉࡁࡉࡀࡄࡉࡀ Lidzbarski translates the word: "planets", presumably from šaba ahia, "seven brothers" (MII n. 5 p. 254). The Planets are, indeed considered little better than demons since actions swayed by emotions are harmful to the soul, and faults committed under planetary influence must be expiated after death in the maṭarata, realms equivalent to purgatories (Drower, The Coronation of Great Šišlam, 1962: xvi). The planetary deities survived among Mandaeans as forces governing the days of the week. (Budge, 1939: 380) The official Mandaean religion condemns the worship of the old Babylonian planetary deities, even though popular magic has seen fit to invoke their aid, e. g. in the unpublished text (DC 18) "Zrazta d̠-Šuba Šibiahia" or The Protection of the Seven Planets. We read of the evil designs in the marriage ceremony of the Great Šišlam: "I laughed at the planets, (and) at what they planned and did. I dwelt amongst the Seven (planets) but they laid no hand upon me. For the Elect that loved the Life there shall be good things. Woe to the planets that scheme wickedness against my Chosen Ones" (Drower, Šarh d̠-Qabin, 1950: 63. Also, Yamauchi, 1967: 32). As for demonizing the planets, Zaehner writes: "The stars proper followed their regular courses and so reflected the divine order: the planets, however, followed eccentric courses and for this reason could not be fitted into that order: hence they must be diabolical" (Zaehner, 1955: 152).

[1021] ࡌࡀࡅࡋࡀࡍࡀ Maulānā “Our Lord.” Stroumsa writes: “According to the Kalām-i-Pīr, the Divinity (Maulānā, “Our Lord”) manifested itself in each generations of mankind, Maulānā appeared under three different names which are, in fact, variations upon Melchizedek’s name or title (melekh šalem, King of Salem, Gen 14: 18). The people of the first prophet, Adam, were the Sabaeans. They identified Melchizedek with Seth and said that at the resurrection he would appear as a judge and as a revealers of the teachings kept secret during history. Melechizedek appeared again during the generations of Noah and Abraham, i.e. at the time of the flood and of Sodom’s punishment” (For the conception of ࡌࡀࡅࡋࡀࡍࡀ maulana in the Isma'īlī belief, see Stroumsa 1984: 111).

He assumes that this '"knowledge" is able to blind, subjectand finally destroy its adversaries.' The head represents the seat of prophecy and that the splitting of Rūha's head should mean that the knowledge is designated to the elect and cannot be contained inside the mind of the evil (Lupieri, 2002: 190 n. 17).

[1054] Concerning the old deities of Mesopotamia during the Sasanian dynasty Morony writes: “Several ancient native deities were still venerated in late Sasanian Iraq. Šamiš or Shamash (the sun), Sīn (the Moon), Bel (Jupiter), Nanai and Nergal are all invoked as benevolent powers on a Syriac incantation bowl from Nippur. Bel and Nbu (Mercury) were associated with Babil and were objects of sacrifice at the court of Shāpūr II. . . The great goddess of Mesopotamia had several names during the Sasanian period, but she was also still known by her original name of Nanai (from Sumerian Inanna), ‘the great goddess of the entire earth’. The cult of Nanai was originally associated with the regions of Maysan and Babylonia” (Morony, 1984: 386).

Myrtle wreaths are given to Mandaeans by their priests as part of the rite of maṣbūta "baptism" (MII, p. 100).

Lady Drower states: "Magian priests wore myrtle wreaths. Sumerians and Babylonians apparently held foliage before the god for the promotion of fertility" (MII, p. 121-2).

[1079] “The orgiastic feast prepared by world for the seduction of man, or more generally of the alien Life from beyond, is repeatedly described in extensive scenes in Mandaean writings” (Jonas, 1958: 71).

[1080] This is a general Gnostic motif, nevertheless, the Mandaeans abhore celibacy and encourage marriage and have children. According to Jonas, seduction with “love” is the main weapon of the material world with which it entraps man and makes him remain in the world of darkness. (Ibid pp. 72, 3).

[1082] ࡈࡅࡓࡀ ࡊࡀࡓࡉࡌࡋࡀ ṭura karimla Mt. Carmel is identified with the story of Elijah and has always continued to be a sacred mount. Doubtless communities of 'Sons of the Prophets' and the rest had continuously there their retreats. Carmel had been sacred spot long before the days of Elijah, who hid there from his pursuers. The Arabs still call it Jebal Mar Elyas (Mount Lord Elijah). Mead says "Yamblichus in his Life of the sage says that Pythagoras visited it." (Mead, 1924: 47 n. 4) Biblically, Mt. Carmel is referenced most often as a symbol of beauty and fertility. To be given the "splendor of Carmel" was to be blessed indeed (Isa 35: 2). Solomon praised his beloved: "your head crowns you like Mount Carmel" (Song of Songs 7: 5).

may have been temples of Bel and of Nabu at Burs as late as third century. There are references to pagan temples with idols in the late sixth and early seventh centuries in Beth 'Arbhaye, Arzon, Margha, Adiabene, Beth Garme, Kaskar, and Maysan. . . By the fourth century, pagans were already beginning to celebrate their festivals in secret. Such a festival was held in honour of Nabu at his altar in a mountain village near 'Anat and included dancing, raillery, and the playing of the lyre and drums" (Morony, 1984: 384-85).

[1163] Cf. Marduk who bound, by his magic seal, the seven stars and the twelve signs of the zodiacs. (Morony, 1984: 392) Morony also states: "By the end of the Sasanian period, paganism in Iraq was characterized by sacrifice, magic and astrology. The ancient native deities survived and were venerated mainly because of their association with the planets in astrology and with imported Hellenistic and Iranian gods. But even among pagans, the old gods were being relegated to the position of demons. This was probably due to the influence of Gnosticism, which emphasized the harmful aspect of the planets in astral paganism" (Ibid 394).
